OVID
METAMORPHOSES
II
OVID
METAMORPHOSES
WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY FRANK JUSTUS MILLER
Ph.D., L.L.D.
PROFESSOR IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

IN TWO VOLUMES
II
BOOKS IX–XV

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD
CAMBRIDGE MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
MCMLVIII
CONTENTS

METAMORPHOSES:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>BOOK</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>BOOK IX</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK X</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK XI</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK XII</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK XIII</td>
<td>227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK XIV</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOOK XV</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

INDEX

| INDEX | 429 |
QVAE gemitus truncaeque deo Neptunius heros causa rogat frontis, cum sic Calydonius amnis coepit inornatos redimitus harundine crines:

"triste petis munus. quis enim sua proelia victus commemorare velit? referam tamen ordine, nec tam turpe fuit vinci, quam contendisse decorum est, magnaque dat nobis tantus solacia victor. nomine siqua suo fando pervenit ad aures Deianira tuas, quondam pulcherrima virgo multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum. cum quibus ut soceri domus est intrata petiti, ‘accipe me generum,’ dixi ‘Parthaone nate’: dixit et Alcides. alii cessere duobus. ille Iovem socerum dare se, famamque laborum, et superata suae referebat iussa novercae. contra ego ‘turpe deum mortali cedere’ dixi—nondum erat ille deus—‘dominum me cernis aquarum
The Neptunian hero asked the god why he groaned and what was the cause of his mutilated forehead. And thus the Calydonian river, binding up his rough locks with a band of reeds, made answer: "'Tis an unpleasant task you set; for who would care to chronicle his defeats? Still I will tell the story as it happened: nor was it so much a disgrace to be defeated as it was an honour to have striven at all, and the thought that my conqueror was so mighty is a great comfort to me. Deianira (if you have ever heard of her) was once a most beautiful maiden and the envied hope of many suitors. When along with them I entered the house of the father of the maid I sought, I said: 'Take me for son-in-law, O son of Parthaon.' Hercules said the same, and the others yielded their claims to us two. He pleaded the fact that Jove was his father, pleaded his famous labours and all that he had overcome at the command of his stepmother. In reply I said: 'It is a shame for a god to give place to a mortal' (Hercules had not yet been made a god); 'you behold in me the lord of the 1 Theseus was the reputed son of Aegeus; but there was a current tradition that he was really the son of Neptune.

2 Oeneus.
OVID
cursibus obliquis inter tua regna fluentum.
nec gener externis hospes tibi missus ab oris, sed popularis ego et rerum pars una tuae regna fluentum.
tantum ne noceat, quod me nec regia Iuno odit, et omnis abest iussorum poena laborum.
nam, quo te iactas, Alcmena nate, creatum, Iuppiter aut falsus pater est, aut crimine verus.
matris adulterio patrem petis. elige, fictum esse Iovem malis, an te per dedecus ortum.'
talia dicentem iandudum lumine torvo spectat, et accensae non fortiter imperat iare, verbaque tot reddit: 'melior mihi dextera lingua.
dummodo pugnando superem, tu vince loquendo' 30 congrediturque ferox. puduit modo magna locutum cedere: reieci viridem de corpore vestem, brachiaque opposui, tenuique a pectore varas in statione manus et pugnae membra paravi.
ille cavis hausto spargit me pulvere palmis, 35 inque vicem fulvae tactu flavescit harenae.
et modo cervicem, modo crura micantia captat, aut captare putes, omnique a parte lacescit.
me mea defendit gravitas frustraque petebar;
haud secus ac moles, magno quam murmure fluctus oppugnant; manet illa, suoque est pondere tuta. 41 dugredimur paulum, rursusque ad bella coimus, inque gradu stetimus, certi non cedere, eratque cum pede pes iunctus, totoque ego pectore pronus et digitos digitis et frontem fronte premebam. 45 non aliter vidi fortis concurreare tauros, waters which flow down their winding courses through your realm. If I wed your daughter, it will be no stranger from foreign shores; but I shall be one of your own countrymen, a part of your own kingdom. Only let it not be to my disadvantage that Queen Juno does not hate me and that no labours are imposed upon me in consequence of her hate. For Jove, from whom you boast that you have sprung, O son of Alcmena, is either not your father, or is so to your disgrace. Through your mother’s sin you claim your father. Choose, then, whether you prefer to say that your claim to Jove is false, or to confess yourself the son of shame.’ As I thus spoke he eyed me for a long while with lowering gaze and, unable to control his hot wrath longer, he answered just these words: ‘My hand is better than my tongue. Let me but win in fighting and you may win in speech’; and he came at me fiercely. I was ashamed to draw back after having spoken so boldly; and so I threw off my green coat, put up my arms, held my clenched hands out in front of my breast in position, and so prepared me for the fight. He caught up some dust in the hollow of his hand and threw it over me and in turn himself became yellow with the tawny sand. And now he caught at my neck, now at my quick-moving legs (or you would think he did), and attacked me at every point. My weight protected me and I was attacked in vain. Just like a cliff I stood, which, though the roaring waves dash against it, stands secure, safe in its own bulk. We draw apart a little space, then rush together again to the fray and stand firm in our tracks, each determined not to yield. Foot locked with foot, fingers with fingers clenched, brow against brow, with all my body’s forward-leaning weight I pressed upon him. Like that have I seen two strong bulls rush cum, pretium pugnae, toto nitidissima saltu expetitur coniumx: spectant armenta paventque nescia, quem maneat tanti victoria regni.
ter sine profectu voluit nitentia contra 50 reicere Alcides a se mea pectora; quarto excuit amplexus, adductaque brachia solvit,¹ inpulsumque manu—certum est mihi vera fateri—protinus avertit, tergoque onerosus inhaesit.
siqua fides,—neque enim ficta mihi gloria voce 55
quae retur—inposito pressus mihi monte videbar.
vix tamen inserui sudore fluentia multo brachia, vix solvi duros a pectore nexus.
instat anhelanti, prohibetque resumere vires, et cervice mea potitur. tum denique tellus pressa genu nostro est, et harenas ore momordi.
ininferior virtute, meas divertor ad artes, elaborque viro longum formatus in anguem.
qui postquam flexos sinhavi corpus in orbes, cumque fero movi linguam stridore bisulcam, 65
risit, et inludens nostras Tirynthius artes ‘cunaram labor est angues superare meorum,’ dixit ‘et ut vincas alios, Acheloe, dracones, pars quota Lernaeae serpens eris unus echidnae? vulneribus fecunda suis erat illa, nec ullum de centum numero caput est inpune recisum, quin gemino cervix herede valentior esset.
hanc ego ramosam natis e caede colubris crescentemque malo domui, domitamque reclusi.
quid fore te credas, falsum qui versus in anguem 75
¹ So Merkel: Ehwald volvit.
together when they strive for the sleekest heifer in the pasture as the prize of conflict. The herd looks on in fear and trembling, not knowing to which one victory will award so great dominion. Three times without success did Alcides strive to push away from him my opposing breast; at the fourth attempt he shook off my embrace, broke my hold, and, giving me a sharp buffet with his hand (I am determined to tell it as it was), he whirled me round and clung with all his weight upon my back. If you will believe me (for I am not trying to gain any credit by exaggeration), I seemed to bear the weight of a mountain on my back. With difficulty I thrust in my arms streaming with sweat, with difficulty I broke his hard grip from my body. He pressed close upon me as I panted for breath, gave me no chance to regain my strength, and got me around the neck. Then at length I fell to my knees upon the earth and bit the dust. Finding myself no match for him in strength, I had recourse to my arts, and glided out of his grasp in the form of a long snake. But when I wound my body into twisting coils, and darted out my forked tongue and hissed fiercely at him, the hero of Tiryns only laughed, and mocking at my arts he said: 'It was the task of my cradle days to conquer snakes; and though you should outdo all other serpents, Acheloüs, how small a part of that Lernaean monster would you, just one snake, be? For it thrive on the wounds I give; nor was any one of its hundred heads cut off without its neck being the stronger by two succeeding heads. This creature, branching out with serpents sprung from death and thriving on destruction, I overmastered and, having overmastered, destroyed. And what do you think will become of you who, having assumed but a lying serpent form, make use of armā aliena moves, quem forma precaria celat?' dixerat, et summo digitorum vincula collo inicit: angebar, cēu guttura forçipe pressus, pollicibusque meas pugnabam evellere fauces.
sic quoque devicto restabat tertia tauri forma trucis. tauro mutatus membra rebello.
induit ille toris a laeva parte lacertos, admissumque trahens sequitur, depessaque dura cornua figit humo, meque alta sternit harena.
nec satis hoc fuerat: rigidum fera dextera cornu dum tenet, infregit, truncaque a fronte revellit.
naides hoc, pomis et odoro flore repletem, sacrarunt; divesque meo Bona Copia cornu est."

Dixerat: et nymphe ritu succincta Dianae, una ministrarum, fusis utrimque capillis, incessit totumque tulit praedivite cornu autumnnum et mensas, felicia poma, secundas. lux subit; et primo feriente cacumina sole discedunt iuvenes, neque enim dum flumina pacem et placidos habeant lapsus totaeque residant opperiuntur aquae. vultus Achelous agrestis et lacerum cornu mediis caput abdidit undis.

Hunc tamen ablati domuit iactura decoris, cetera sospes habet. capitis quoque fronde saligna aut superinposita celatur harundine damnum.
at te, Nesse ferox, eiusdem virginis ardor perdiderat volucri traiectum terga sagitta.
namque nova repetens patrios cum coniuge muros borrowed arms, who are masked in a shifting form? So saying he fixed his vice-like grip upon my throat. I was in anguish, as if my throat were in a forceps' grip, and struggled to tear my jaws from his fingers. Conquered in this form also, there remained to me my third refuge, the form of a savage bull. And so in bull form I fought him. He threw his arms around my neck on the left, kept up with me as I ran at full speed, dragging upon me; and, finally, forced down my hard horns and thrust them into the earth and laid me low in the deep dust. Nor was this enough: holding my tough horn in his pitiless right hand, he broke it off and tore it from my forehead, mutilating me. This horn the naiads took, filled it with fruit and fragrant flowers, and hallowed it. And now the goddess of glad Abundance is enriched with my horn."

So spoke the river-god; and lo, a nymph girt like Diana, one of the attendants with locks flowing free, appeared and served them from her bounteous horn with all the fruits of Autumn, and wholesome apples for the second course. The dawn came on, and, as the first rays of the sun smote the mountain-tops, the youths took their departure; for they did not wait until the river should flow in peaceful current and all the flood-waters should subside. And Acheloïs hid his rustic features and his head, scarred from the wrenched-off horn, beneath his waves.

He was humbled indeed by the loss of his beauteous horn, which had been taken from him, though scathless in all else, a loss which he could hide with willow boughs and reeds entwined about his head. But, O savage Nessus, a passion for the same maiden utterly destroyed you, pierced through the body by a flying arrow. For, seeking his native city with his venerat Eueni rapidas love natus ad undas.
OVID

uberior solito, nimbis hiemalibus auctus, 105 verticibusque frequens erat atque inpervius amnis.
intrepidum pro se, curam de coniuge agentem Nessus adit, membrisque valens scitusque vadorum, "officio" que "meo ripa sistetur in illa haec," ait "Alcide. tu viribus utere nando!" 110 pallentemque metu, fluviumque ipsumque timentem tradidit Aonius pavidam Calydonida Nesso.
mox, ut erat, pharetraque gravis spolioque leonis—nam clavam et curvos trans ripam miserat arcus—"quandoquidem coepi, superentur flumina" dixit, nec dubitat nec, qua sit clementissimus amnis, 116 quaerit, et obsequio deferri spernit aquarum.
iamque tenens ripam, missos cum tolleret arcus, coniugis agnovit vocem Nessoque paranti fallere depositum "quo te fiducia" clamat
"vana pedum, violente, rapit? tibi, Nesse biformis, dicimus. exaudi, nec res intereipe nostras.
si te nulla mei reverentia movit, at orbes concubitus vetitos poterant inhibere paterni.
haud tamen effugies, quamvis ope fidis equina; 125 vulnere, non pedibus te consequar." ultima dicta res probat, et missa fugientia terga sagitta traicit. exstabat ferrum de pectore aduncum 10
bride, the son of Jove had come to the swift waters of Euenus. The stream was higher than its wont, swollen with winter rains, full of wild eddies, and quite impassable. As the hero stood undaunted for himself, but anxious for his bride, Nessus came up, strong of limb and well acquainted with the fords, and said: "By my assistance, Alcides, she shall be set on yonder bank; and do you use your strength and swim across!" The Theban accordingly entrusted to Nessus' care the Calydonian maid, pale and trembling, fearing the river and the centaur himself. At once, just as he was, burdened with his quiver and the lion's skin (for he had tossed his club and curving bow across to the other bank), the hero said: "Since I have undertaken it, these waters shall be overcome." And in he plunged; nor did he seek out where the stream was kindliest, and scorned to reach his goal by the courtesy of the waters. And now he had just gained the other bank, and was picking up his bow which he had thrown across, when he heard his wife's voice calling; and to Nessus, who was in act to betray his trust, he shouted: 'Where is your vain confidence in your fleetness carrying you, you ravisher? To you, two-formed Nessus, I am talking: listen, and do not dare come between me and mine. If no fear of me has weight with you, at least your father's 1 whirling wheel should prevent the outrage you intend. You shall not escape, however much you trust in your horse's fleetness. With my deadly wound, if not with my feet, I shall overtake you." Suing the action to his last words, he shot an arrow straight into the back of the fleeing centaur. The barbed point protruded from his

1 i.e. Ixion, who also had been guilty of an outrage for which he suffered his well-known punishment in Hades.
OVID

quod simul evulsum est, sanguis per utrumque foramen emicuit mixtus Lernaei tabe veneni. 130 excipit hunc Nessus: "neque enim moriemur inulti" secum ait, et calido velamina tincta cruore dat munus raptae velut inritamen amoris.

Longa fuit medi mora temporis, actaque magni Herculis inplerant terras odiumque novercae. 135 victor ab Oechalia Cenaeo sacra parabat vota Iovi, cum Fama loquax praecessit ad aures, Deianira, suas, quae veris addere falsa gaudet, et e minimo sua per mendacia crescit, Amphitryoniadene Ioles ardore teneri. 140 credit amans, venerisque novae perterrita fama indulsit primo lacrimis, flendoque dolorem diffudit miseranda suum. mox deinde "quid autem flemus?" ait "paelex lacrimis laetabitur istis.
quae quoniam adveniet, properandum aliquidque novandum est, 145 dum licet, et nondum thalamos tenet altera nostros.
conquerar, an sileam? repetam Calydona, morerne?
excedam tectis? an, si nihil amplius, obstem?
quid si me, Meleagre, tuam memor esse sororem forte paro facinus, quantumque iniuria possit 150 femineusque dolor, iugulata paelice testor?" incursus animus varios habet. omnibus illis praetulit inbutam Nesseo sanguine vestem breast. This he tore out, and spurring forth from both wounds came the blood mixed with the deadly poison of the Lernaean hydra. Nessus caught this, and muttering, "I shall not die unavenged," he gave his tunic, soaked with his warm blood, to Deianira as a gift, potent to revive waning love.

Meanwhile, long years had passed; the deeds of the mighty Hercules had filled the earth and had sated his stepmother's hate. Returning victorious from Oechalia, he was preparing to pay his vows to Jove at Cenaeum, when tattling Rumour came on ahead to your ears, Deianira, Rumour, who loves to mingle false and true and, though very small at first, grows huge through lying, and she reported that the son of Amphitryon¹ was enthralled by love of Iole.² The loving wife believes the tale, and completely overcome by the report of this new love, she indulges her tears at first and, poor creature, pours out her grief in a flood of weeping. But soon she says: "Why do I weep? My rival will rejoice at my tears. But since she is on her way hither I must make haste and devise some plan while I may, and while as yet another woman has not usurped my couch. Shall I complain or shall I grieve in silence? Shall I go back to Calydon or tarry here? Shall I leave my house or, if I can nothing more, stay and oppose her? What if, O Meleager, remembering that I am your sister, I make bold to plan some dreadful deed, and by killing my rival prove how much a woman's outraged feelings and grief can do?" Her mind has various promptings; but to all other plans she prefers to send to her husband the tunic soaked in Nessus' blood, in the hope that this

¹ The husband of Alcmena and putative father of Hercules.
² The daughter of Eurytus, king of Oechalia. mittere, quae vires defecto reddat amori, ignaroque Lichae, quid tradat, nescia, luctus ipsa suos tradit blandisque miserrima verbis, dona det illa viro, mandat. capit insieus heros, induiturque umeris Lernaeae virus echidnae.

Tura dabat primis et verba precantia flammis, vinaque marmoreas patera fundebat in aras:
incaluit vis illa mali, resolutaque flammis Herculeos abiit late dilapsa per artus.
dum potuit, solita gemitum virtute repressit.
 victa malis postquam est patientia, reppulit aras, inplevitque suis nemorosum vocibus Oeten.
 nec mora, letiferam conatur scindere vestem:
qua trahitur, trahit illa cutem, foedunque relatu,
a aut haeret membris frustra temptata revelli,
a aut laceros artus et grandia detegit ossa.

ipse cruor, gelido ceu quondam lammina candens tineta lacu, stridit coquiturque ardente veneno.

 nec modus est, sorbent avidae praecordia flammac, caeruleusque fluit toto de corpore sudor, ambustique sonant nervi, caecaque medullis tabe liquefactis tollens ad sidera palmas

“cladibus,” exclamat “Saturnia, pascere nostris:
pascere, et hanc pestem specta, crudelis, ab alto, corque ferum satia. vel si miserandus et hosti, hoc est, si tibi sum, diris cruciatibus aegram invisamque animam natamque laboribus aufer.

hoc mihi munus erit; decet haec dare dona

novercam.
may revive her husband's failing love; and to Lichas, ignorant of what he bears, with her own hands she all unwittingly commits the cause of her future woe, and with honeyed words the unhappy woman bids him take this present to her lord. The hero innocently received the gift and put on his shoulders the tunic soaked in the Lernaean hydra's poison.

He was offering incense and prayers amid the kindling flames and pouring wine from the libation bowl upon the marble altar: then was the virulence of that pest aroused and, freed by the heat, went stealing throughout the frame of Hercules. While he could, with his habitual manly courage he held back his groans. But when his endurance was conquered by his pain, he overthrew the altar and filled woody Oeta with his cries. At once he tries to tear off the deadly tunic; but where it is torn away, it tears the skin with it and, ghastly to relate, it either sticks to his limbs, from which he vainly tries to tear it, or else lays bare his torn muscles and huge bones. His very blood hisses and boils with the burning poison, as when a piece of red-hot metal is plunged into a cold pool. Without limit the greedy flames devour his vitals; the dark sweat pours from his whole body; his burnt sinews crackle and, while his very marrow melts with the hidden, deadly fire, he stretches suppliant hands to heaven and cries: "Come, feast, Saturnia,¹ upon my destruction; feast, I say; look down, thou cruel one, from thy lofty seat, behold my miserable end, and glut thy savage heart! Or, if I merit pity even from my enemy—that is, from thee—take hence this hateful life, sick with its cruel sufferings and born for toil. This will be a boon to me, surely a fitting boon

¹ Juno.
ergo ego foedantem peregrino templaque cruore Busirin domui? saevoque alimenta parentis Antaeo eripui? nec me pastoris Hiberi forma triplex, nec forma triplex tua, Cerbere, movit?
vosne, manus, validi pressistis cornua tauri?
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae.
Partheniumque nemus? vestra virtute relatus Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro,
pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone?
nec mihi centauri potuere resistere, nec mi
Arcadiae vastator aper? nec profuit hydrae
crescere per damnun geminasque resumere vires?
quid, quod Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues
plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi,
visaque deieci, dominumque ipsosque peremi?
his elisa iacet moles Nemeaca lacertis:
hac caelum cervice tuli. defessa iubendo est
saeva Iovis coniunx: ego sum indefessus agendo.
sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae.
Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro,
pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone?
nec mihi centauri potuere resistere, nec mi
Arcadiae vastator aper? nec profuit hydrae
crescere per damnun geminasque resumere vires?
quid, quod Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues
plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi,
visaque deieci, dominumque ipsosque peremi?
his elisa iacet moles Nemeaca lacertis:
hac caelum cervice tuli. defessa iubendo est
saeva Iovis coniunx: ego sum indefessus agendo.
sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae.
Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro,
pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone?
nec mihi centauri potuere resistere, nec mi
Arcadiae vastator aper? nec profuit hydrae
crescere per damnun geminasque resumere vires?
quid, quod Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues
plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi,
visaque deieci, dominumque ipsosque peremi?
his elisa iacet moles Nemeaca lacertis:
hac caelum cervice tuli. defessa iubendo est
saeva Iovis coniunx: ego sum indefessus agendo.
sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae.
Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro,
pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone?
nec mihi centauri potuere resistere, nec mi
Arcadiae vastator aper? nec profuit hydrae
crescere per damnun geminasque resumere vires?
quid, quod Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues
plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi,
visaque deieci, dominumque ipsosque peremi?
his elisa iacet moles Nemeaca lacertis:
hac caelum cervice tuli. defessa iubendo est
saeva Iovis coniunx: ego sum indefessus agendo.
sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti
vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae.
for a stepmother to bestow! Was it for this I slew Busiris, who defiled his temples with strangers' blood? that I deprived the dread Antaeus of his mother's strength? that I did not fear the Spanish shepherd’s triple form, nor thy triple form, O Cerberus? Was it for this, O hands, that you broke the strong bull's horns? that Elis knows your toil, the waves of Stymphalus, the Parthenian woods? that by your prowess the girdle wrought of Thermodonian gold in relief was secured, and that fruit guarded by the dragon's sleepless eyes? Was it for this that the centaurs could not prevail against me, nor the boar that wasted Arcady? that it did not avail the hydra to grow by loss and gain redoubled strength? What, when I saw the Thracian's horses fat with human blood and those mangers full of mangled corpses and, seeing, threw them down and slew the master and the steeds themselves? By these arms the monster of Nemea lies crushed; upon this neck I upheld the sky! The cruel wife of Jove is weary of imposing toils; but I am not yet weary of performing them. But now a strange and deadly thing is at me, which neither by strength can I resist, nor yet by weapons nor by arms. Deep through my lungs steals the devouring fire, and feeds through all my frame. But Eurystheus is alive and well! And there are those who can believe that there are gods!” He spoke and in sore distress went ranging along high Oeta; just as a bull carries about the shaft that has pierced his body, though the giver of the wound has fled. See him there on the mountains oft uttering heartrending groans, oft roaring in agony, oft struggling to tear off all his garments, uprooting great trunks of trees, and raging o'er the mountains or stretching out his arms to his father's skies.

1 Geryon.
2 Diomedes.
OVID

ille per aërias pendens induruit auras: utque ferunt imbres gelidis concrescere ventis, inde nives fieri, nivibus quoque molle rotatis astringi et spissa glomerari grandine corpus, sic illum validis iactum per inane lacertis exsanguemque metu nec quicquam umoris habentem in rigidos versum silices prior edidit aetas. nunc quoque in Euboico scopulus brevis eminet alto gurgite et humanae servat vestigia formae, quem, quasi sensurum, nautae calcare verentur, appellantque Lichan. at tu, Iovis inclita proles, arboribus caesis, quas ardua gesserat Oete, inque pyram structis arcum pharetramque capacem regnaque visuras iterum Troiana sagittas ferre iubes Poeante satum, quo flamma ministro subdita. dumque avidis comprehenditur ignibus agger, congeriem silvae Nemeaeo vellere summam sternis, et inposita clavae cervice recumbis, haud alio vultu, quam si conviva iaceres inter plena meri redimitus pocula sertis.
Of a sudden he caught sight of Lichas cowering with fear and hiding beneath a hollow rock, and with all the accumulated rage of suffering he cried: "Was it you, Lichas, who brought this fatal gift? And shall you be called the author of my death?" The young man trembled, grew pale with fear, and timidly attempted to excuse his act. But while he was yet speaking and striving to clasp the hero's knees, Alcides caught him up and, whirling him thrice and again about his head, he hurled him far out into the Euboean sea, swifter than a missile from a catapult. The youth stiffened as he yet hung high in air; and as drops of rain are said to congeal beneath the chilling blast and change to snow, then whirling snowflakes condense to a soft mass and finally are packed in frozen hail: so, hurled by strong arms through the empty air, bloodless with fear, his vital moisture dried, he changed, old tradition says, to flinty rock. Even to this day in the Euboean sea a low rock rises from the waves, keeping the semblance of a human form; this rock, as if it were sentient, the sailors fear to tread on, and they call it Lichas. But you, illustrious son of Jove, cut down the trees which grew on lofty Oeta, built a huge funeral pyre, and bade the son of Poeas, who set the torch beneath, to take in recompense your bow, capacious quiver and arrows, destined once again to see the realm of Troy. And as the pyre began to kindle with the greedy flames, you spread the Nemean lion's skin on top of the pile of wood and, with your club for pillow, laid you down with peaceful countenance, as if, amid cups of generous wine and crowned with garlands, you were reclining on a banquet-couch.

1 Philoctetes.
OVID

Iamque valens et in omne latus diffusa sonabat, securosque artus contemptoremque petebat flamma suum. timuere dei pro vindice terrae. quos ita, sensit enim, laeto Saturnius ore Iuppiter adloquitur: "nostra est timor iste voluptas, o superi, totoque libens mihi pectore grator, quod memoris populi dicor rectorque paterque et mea progenies vestro quoque tuta favore est. nam quamquam ipsius datis hoc inmanibus actis, obligor ipse tamen. sed enim nec pectora vano fida metu paveant. istas nec spernite flammam! omnia qui vicit, vincet, quos cernitis, ignes; nec nisi materna Vulcanum parte potentem sentiet. aeternum est a me quod traxit, et expres atque inmune necis, nullique domabile flammae. idque ego defunctum terra caelestibus oris accipiam, cunctisque meum laetabile factum dis fore confido. siquis tamen Hercule, siquis forte deo doliturus erit, data praemia nolet, sed meruisse dari sciet, invitusque probabit." adsensere dei. coniunx quoque regia visa est cetera non duro, duro tamen ultima vultu dicta tulisse Iovis, seque indoluisse notatam. interea quodcumque fuit populabile flammae, Mulciber abstulerat, nec cognoscenda remansit Herculis effigies, nec quicquam ab imagine ductum matris habet, tantumque Iovis vestigia servat. utque novus serpens posita cum pelle senecta luxuriare solet, squamaque niter e recenti,
And now on all sides the spreading flames were crackling fiercely, and licking at the careless limbs that scorned their power. The gods felt fear for the earth's defender. Then Saturnian Jove, well pleased (for he knew their thoughts), addressed them: "Your solicitude is a joy to me, ye gods of heaven, and I rejoice with all my heart that I am called king and father of a grateful race of gods, and that my offspring is safe under your protecting favour also. For, though you offer this tribute to his own mighty deeds, still I myself am much beholden to you. But let not your faithful hearts be filled with needless fear. Scorn not those flames! He who has conquered all things shall conquer these fires which you see; nor shall he feel Vulcan's power save in the part his mother gave him. Immortal is the part which he took from me, and that is safe and beyond the power of death, which no flame can destroy. And when this is done with earth I shall receive him on the heavenly shores, and I trust that this act of mine will be pleasing to all the gods. But if there is anyone, if there is anyone, I say, who is going to be sorry that Hercules is made a god, why then, he will begrudge the prize, but he will at least know that it was given deservedly, and will be forced to approve the deed." The gods assented; even Juno seemed to take all else complacently, but not complacently the last words of Jove, and she grieved that she had been singled out for rebuke. Meanwhile, whatever the flames could destroy, Mulciber had now consumed, and no shape of Hercules that could be recognized remained, nor was there anything left which his mother gave. He kept traces only of his father; and as a serpent, its old age sloughed off with its skin, revels in fresh life, and shines resplendent in its sic ubi mortales Tirynthius exuit artus, parte sui meliore viget, maiorque videri coepit et augusta fieri gravitate verendus.
quam pater omnipotens inter cava nubila raptum quadriiugo curru radiatibus intulit astris.

Sensit Atlas pondus. neque adhuc Stheneleius iras solverat Eurystheus, odiumque in prole paternum exercebat atrox. at longis anxia curis Argolis Alcmen, questus ubi ponat aniles, cui referat nati testatos orbe labores, cuive suos casus, Iolen habet. Herculis illam imperiis thalamoque animoque receperat Hyllus, inpleratque uterum generoso semine; cui sic incipit Alcmen: "faveant tibi numina saltem, conripiantque moras tum cum matura vocabis praeposita timidis parentibus, Ilithyi, quam mihi difficilem Iunonis gratia fecit, namque laboriferi cum iam natalis adesset Herculis et decimum premeretur sidere signum, tendebat gravitas uterum mihi, quodque ferebam, tantum erat, ut posses auctorem dicere tecti ponderis esse Iovem. nec iam tolerare labores ulterius poteram. quin nunc quoque frigidus artus, dum loquor, horror habet, parsque est meminisse doloris.

septem ego per noctes, totidem cruciata diebus, fessa malis, tendensque ad caelum bracchia, magno Lucinam Nixosque patres clamore vocabam.
illa quidem venit, sed praeccorrupta, meumque quae donare caput Iunoni vellet iniquae.
bright new scales; so when the Tirynthian put off his mortal frame, he gained new vigour in his better part, began to seem of more heroic size, and to become awful in his godlike dignity. Him the Almighty Father sped through the hollow clouds with his team of four, and set him amid the glittering stars.

Atlas felt his weight. But not even now did Eurystheus, the son of Sthenelus, put away his wrath; but his bitter hatred for the father he still kept up towards his race. Now, spent with long-continued cares, Argive Alcmena had in Iole one to whom she could confide her old woman’s troubles, to whom she could relate her son’s labours witnessed by all the world, and her own misfortunes. For by Hercules’ command, Hyllus had received Iole to his arms and heart, and to him she was about to bear a child of that noble race. Thus spoke Alcmena to her: “May the gods be merciful to you at least and give you swift deliverance in that hour when in your need you call on Ilithyia, goddess of frightened mothers in travail, whom Juno’s hatred made so bitter against me. For when the natal hour of toil-bearing Hercules was near and the tenth sign was being traversed by the sun, my burden was so heavy and what I bore so great that you could know Jove was the father of the unborn child; nor could I longer bear my pangs. Nay, even now as I tell it, cold horror holds my limbs and my pains return even as I think of it. For seven nights and days I was in torture; then, spent with anguish, I stretched my arms to heaven and with a mighty wail I called upon Lucina and the three guardian deities of birth. Lucina came, indeed, but pledged in advance to give my life to cruel Juno. There she sat upon the altar before the door, listening to my groans, with her
OVID

utque meos audit gemitus, subsedit in illa ante fores ara, dextroque a poplite laevum pressa genu et digitis inter se pectine inunctis sustinuit partus. tacita quoque carmina voce dixit, et inceptos tenuerunt carmina partus.
nitor, et ingrato facio convicia demens vana Iovi, cupioque mori, moturaque duros verba queror silices. matres Cadmeides adsunt, votaque suscipiunt, exhortanturque dolentem.
una ministrarum, media de plebe, Galanthis, flava comas, aderat, faciendis strenua iussis, officiis dilecta suis. ea sensit iniqua nescio quid Iunone geri, dumque exit et intrat saepe fores, divam residentem vidit in ara bracchique in genibus digitis conexa tenentem, et ‘quaecumque es,’ ait ‘dominae gratare. levata est Argolis Alcmene, potiturque puerpera voto.’ exsiluit, iunctasque manus pavesfacta remisit diva potens uteri: vinculis levor ipsa remissis.
umine decepto risisse Galanthida fama est.
ridentem prenasamque ipsis dea saeva capillis traxit, et e terra corpus relevare volentem arcuit, inque pedes mutavit brachia primos.
strenuitas antiqua manet; nec terga colorem amisere suum: forma est diversa priori.
quae quia mendaci parientem iuverat ore, ore parit nostrasque domos, ut et ante, irrequentat.”

Dixit, et admonitu veteris commota ministrae

24
right knee crossed over her left, and with her fingers interlocked; and so she stayed the birth. Charms also, in low muttered words, she chanted, and the charms prevented my deliverance. I fiercely strove and, mad with pain, I shrieked out vain revilings against ungrateful Jove. I longed to die, and my words would have moved the unfeeling rocks. The Theban matrons stood around me, appealed to heaven, and strove to stay my grief. There was one of my attendants born of the common folk, Galanthis, with hair of reddish hue, active always in obedience to my commands, well loved by me for her faithful services. She felt assured that unjust Juno was working some spell against me; and as she was passing in and out the house, she saw the goddess seated on the altar holding her clinched hands upon her knees, and said to her: ‘Whoever you are, congratulate our mistress: Argive Alcmena is relieved; her prayers are answered and her child is born.’ Up leaped the goddess of birth, unclinched her hands and spread them wide in consternation; my bonds were loosed and I was delivered of my child. They said Galanthis laughed in derision of the cheated deity. And as she laughed the cruel goddess caught her by the hair and dragged her on the ground; and, as the girl strove to rise, she kept her there and changed her arms into the fore-legs of an animal. Her old activity remained and her hair kept its former hue; but her former shape was changed. And because she had helped her labouring mistress with her deceitful lips, through her mouth must she bring forth her young. And still, as of yore, she makes our dwelling-place her home.”

She spoke and, stirred by the warning fate of her former attendant, groaned deeply. And as she

---

1 Galanthis was changed into a weasel.
ingemuit. quam sic nurus est affata dolentem: te tamen, o generetrix, alienae sanguine nostro rapta movet facies. quid si tibi mira sororis fata meae referam? quamquam lacrimaeque dolorque impediant, prohibentque loqui. fuit unica matri—me pater ex alia genuit—notissima forma

Oechalidum, Dryope. quam virginitate carentem vimque dei passam Delphos Delumque tenentis excipit Andraemon, et habetur coniuge felix.
est lacus, adclivis devexo margine formam litoris efficiens, summum myrteta coronant.

venerat huc Dryope fatorum nescia, quoque indignere magis, nymphis latura coronas, inque sinu puerum, qui nondum impleverat annum dulce ferebat onus tepidique ope lactis alebat.
haut procul a stagno Tyrios imitata colores in spem bacarum florebat aquatica lotos.
carpserat hinc Dryope, quos oblectamina nato porrigeret, flores, et idem factura videbar—namque aderam—vidi guttas e flore cruentas decidere et tremulo ramos horrore moveri.

scilicet, ut referunt tardi nunc denique agrestes, Lotis in hanc nymphe, fugiens obscena Priapi, contulerat versos, servato nomine, vultus.

“Nescierat soror hoc. quae cum perterrita retro ire et adoratis vellet discedere nymphis, haeserunt radice pedes. convellere pugnat, nec quicquam, nisi summa movet. suberescit ab imo, totaque paulatim lentus premit inguina cortex.
grieved her daughter-in-law thus addressed her: "And yet, my mother, 'tis the changed form of one not of our blood you grieve for. What if I should tell you of the strange misfortunes of my own sister? And yet my tears and grief check me and almost prevent my speech. She was her mother's only child (for I was born of my father's second wife), Dryope, the most beautiful of all the Oechalian maids. Her, a maid no more through the violence of him who rules at Delphi and at Delos, Andraemon took and was counted happy in his wife. There is a pool whose shelving banks take the form of sloping shores, the top of which a growth of myrtle crowns. Dryope had come hither innocent of the fates and, that you may be the more indignant, with the intention of gathering garlands for the nymphs. In her arms she bore a pleasing burden, her infant boy not yet a full year old, and nursed him at her breast. Near the margin of the pool a plant of the water-lotus grew full of bright blossoms, the harbingers of fruit. To please her little son the mother plucked some of these blossoms, and I was in the act to do the same (for I was with her), when I saw drops of blood falling from the flowers and all the branches shivering with horror. For, you must know, as the slow rustics still relate, Lotis, a nymph, while fleeing from Priapus' vile pursuit, had taken refuge in this shape, changed as to features but keeping still her name.

"But my sister knew naught of this. And when she started back in terror and, with prayers to the nymphs, strove to leave the place, her feet clung, root-like, to the ground; she struggled to tear herself away, but nothing moved except the upper part of her body; the slow-creeping bark climbed upward from her feet and covered all her loins. When ut vidit, conata manu laniare capillos, fronde manum implevit: frondes caput omne tenebant.
OVID

at puer Amphissos, (namque hoc avus Eurytus illi addiderat nomen,) materna rigescere sentit ubera; nec sequitur ducentem lacteum umor.
spectatrix aderam fati crudelis, opemque non poteram tibi ferre, soror, quantumque valebam, crescentem truncum ramosque amplexa morabar, 361 et, fateor, volui sub eodem cortice condi.

"Ecce vir Andraemon genitorque miserrimus adsunt, et quaerunt Dryopen: Dryopen quaerentibus illis ostendi loton. tepido dant oscula ligno, 365 adfusique suae radicibus arboris haerent.
nil nisi iam faciem, quod non foret arbor, haberat cara soror: lacrimae misero de corpore factis inrorant foliis; et, dum licet, oraque praestant vocis iter, tales effundit in aëra questus:

'siqua fides miseris, hoc me per numina iuro non meruisse nefas. patior sine crimine poenam.
viximus innocuae. si mentior, arida perdam quas habeo frondes, et caesa securibus urar.
hunc tamen infantem maternis demite ramis, 375 et date nutrici, nostraque sub arboris saepe lac facitote bibat, nostraque sub arbores ludat.
cumque ioqui poterit, matrem facitote salutet, et tristis dicat "latet hoc in stipite mater." stagna tamen timeat, nec carpat ab arbores flores, 380
she saw this, she strove to tear her hair with her hands, but only filled her hands with leaves; for leaves now covered all her head. But the boy, Amphissos (for so his grandsire, Eurytus, had named him), felt his mother's breast grow hard, nor could he any longer draw his milky feast. I stood and saw your cruel fate, my sister, nor could I bring you any aid at all. And yet, so far as I could, I delayed the change by holding your growing trunk and branches fast in my embrace; and (shall I confess it?) I longed to hide me beneath that selfsame bark.

"But lo, her husband, Andraemon, and her most unhappy father came seeking for Dryope; and Dryope, in response to their questionings, I showed them as the lotus-tree. They printed kisses on the warm wood and, prostrate on the ground, they clung about the roots of their darling tree. And now my dear sister had only her face remaining, while all the rest was tree. Her tears rained down upon the leaves made from her poor body; and while they could, and her lips afforded utterance for her voice, it poured forth these complaints into the air: 'If oaths of wretched sufferers have any force, I swear by the gods that I have not merited this dreadful thing. In utter innocence I am suffering, and in innocence I have always lived. If I say not the truth, parched with the drought may I lose my foliage and may I be cut down by the axe and burned. But take this infant from his mother's limbs and give him to a nurse. Beneath my tree let him often come and take his milk; beneath my tree let him play. And when he learns to talk, have him greet his mother and sadly say: "Here in this tree-trunk is my mother hid." Still let him fear the pool, pluck no blossoms from the trees, and think all shrubs are goddesses in et frutices omnes corpus putet esse dearum.
care vale coniunx, et tu, germana, paterque!
quin, siqua est pietas, ab acutae vulnere falcis,
a pecoris morsu frondes defendite nostras.
et quoniam mihi fas ad vos incumbere non est, erigite huc artus, et ad oscula nostra venite, dum tangi possum, parvumque attollite natum!
plura loqui nequeo. nam iam per candida mollis colla liber serpit, summoque cacumine condor.
ex oculis removete manus. sine munere vestro tegat inductus morientia lumina cortex! desierant simul ora loqui, simul esse. diuque corpore mutato rami caluere recentes.”

Dumque refert Iole factum mirabile, dumque Eurytidos lacrimas admoto pollice pollice siccat Alcmena, (flet et ipsa tamen,) compescuit omnem res nova tristitiam. nam limine constitit alto paene puer dubiaque tegens lanugine malas, ora reformatus primos Iolaus in annos.
hoc illi dederat Iunonia muneris Hebe, victa viri precibus. quae cum iurare pararet, dona tributuram post hunc se talia nulli, non est passa Themis: “nam iam discordia Thebae bella movent,” dixit “Capaneusque nisi ab Iove vinci haud poterit, fientque pares in vulnere fratres, subductaque suos manes tellure videbit disguise! Farewell, dear husband, and you, sister, and my father! Nay, if you love me still, protect my branches from the sharp knife, my foliage from the browsing sheep. And, since it is not permitted me to bend down to you, reach up to me and let me kiss you while I may; and reach me once more my little son! Now I can say no more; for over my white neck the soft bark comes creeping, and I am buried in its overtopping folds. You need not close my eyes with your hands; without your service let the bark creep up and close my dying eyes!" In the same moment did she cease to speak and cease to be; and long did the new-made branches keep the warmth of the transformed body."

While Iole was telling this wonderful tale, and while Alcmena, herself also in tears, was drying with her sympathetic hand the tears of the daughter of Eurytus, a startling circumstance banished the grief of both. For there, in the deep doorway, stood a youth, almost a boy, with delicate down covering his cheeks, lolaüs, restored in features to his youthful prime. Hebe, Juno's daughter, won by her husband's prayers, had given him this boon; and when she was on the point of swearing that to no one after him would she bestow such gifts, Themis checked her vow. "For," said she, "Thebes is even now embroiled in civil strife, Capaneus shall be invincible save by the hand of Jove himself; the two brothers shall die by mutual wounds; the prophet-king shall in the flesh behold his own spirits.

1 The son of Iphicles, half-brother to Hercules.
2 i.e. Hercules, to whom, after his translation to heaven, Hebe had been given in marriage.
3 Eteocles and Polynices 4 Amphiaraüs.
vivus adhuc vates; ultusque parente parentem natus erit facto pius et sceleratus eodem attonitusque malis, exul mentisque domusque, vultibus Eumenidum matrisque agitabitur umbris, 410 donec eum coniunx fatale poposcerit aurum, cognatumque latus Phegeïus hauserit ensis.
tum demum magno petet hos Acheloia supplex ab Iove Callirhoe natis infantibus annos, neve necem sinat esse diu victoris inultam.
Iuppiter his motus privignae dona nurusque praecipiet, facietque viros inpubibus annis.”

Haec ubi faticano venturi praescia dixit ore Themis, vario superi sermone fremebant, et, cur non aliis eadem dare dona liceret, murmur erat. queritur veteres Pallantias annos coniugis esse sui, queritur canescere mitis Iasiona Ceres, repetitum Mulciber aevum poseit Erichthonio, Venerem quoque cura futuri tangit, et Anchisae renovare paciscitur annos. 425 cui studeat, deus omnis habet; crescitque favore turbida seditio, donec sua Iuppiter ora solvit, et “o! nostri siqua est reverentia,” dixit “quo ruitis? tantumne aliquis sibi posse videtur, fata quoque ut superet? fatis Iolaus in annos, 430 quos egit, rediit. fatis iuvenescere debent 32
engulfed by the yawning earth; and his son¹ shall avenge parent on parent,² filial and accursed in the selfsame act; stunned by these evil doings, banished from reason and from home, he shall be hounded by the Furies and by his mother's ghost until his wife³ shall ask of him the fatal golden necklace and the sword of Phegeus shall have drained his kinsman's blood. And then at last shall Callirhoë, daughter of Acheloüs, by prayer obtain from mighty Jove that her infant sons may attain at once to manly years, that so their victorious father's death be not long unavenged. Jove, thus prevailed upon, shall claim in advance for these the gifts of his stepdaughter⁴ and daughter-in-law,⁵ and shall in an act change beardless boys to men."

When Themis, who knew what was to come, thus spoke with prophetic lips, a confused murmur of varying demands arose among the gods, and they inquired why they were not allowed to grant the same boon to others. Pallantis⁶ lamented her husband's⁷ hoary age; mild Ceres bewailed Iasion's whitening locks; Mulciber demanded renewed life for Erichthonius, and Venus, too, with care for the future, stipulated that old Anchises' years should be restored. Each god had his own favourite; and the noisy, partisan strife kept on, until Jupiter opened his lips and spoke: "Oh, if you have any reverence for me, what are you coming to? Does anyone suppose that he can so far prevail as to alter Fate's decrees? 'Twas by the will of Fate that Iolaüs was restored to the years which he had passed, by Fate

¹ Alcmaeon.  ² Eriphyle.  ³ Callirhoë.
⁴ Hebe.  ⁵ Ibid.  ⁶ Ibid.  ⁷ Tithonus.
Callirhoe geniti, non ambitione nec armis, vos etiam, quoque hoc animo meliore feratis, me quoque fata regunt. quae si mutare valerem, nec nostrum seris curvarent Aeacon anni, perpetuumque aevis florem Rhadamantius haberet cum Minoe meo, qui propter amara senectae pondera despicitur, nec quo prius ordine regnat."

Dicta Iovis movere deos; nec sustinet ullus, cum videat fessos Rhadamantion et Aeacon annis et Minoa, queri. qui, dum fuit integer aevi, terruerat magnas ipso quoque nomine gentes;
tunc erat invalidus, Dei'ionidenque iuventae roboe Mileum Phoeboque parente superbam pertimuit, credensque suis insurgere regnis, haut tamen est patriis arcer penatibus ausus.
sponte fugis, Milete, tua, celerique carina Aegaeas metiris aquas, et in Aside terra moenia constituit positoris habentia nomen.
hic tibi, dum sequitur patriae curvamina ripae, filia Maeandri totiens redeuntis eodem cognita Cyanee, praestanti corpora forma, Byblida cum Cauno, prolem est enixa gemellam.

Byblis in exemplo est, ut ament concessa puellae, Byblis Apollinei correpta cupidine fratre;
non soror ut fratre, nec qua debebat, amabat.
illa quidem primo nullos intellegit ignes, nec peccare putat, quod saepius oscula iungat, quod sua fraterno circumdet brachia collo;
also Callirhoë's sons are destined to leap to manhood from infancy, and not by any ambition or strife of theirs. You, too (I say this that you may be of better mind), and me also the Fates control. If I could change them, old age would not bend low my Aeacus; Rhadamanthus, too, would enjoy perpetual youth, together with my Minos, who, because of the galling weight of age, is now despised and no longer reigns in his former state.”

Jove's words appeased the gods; nor could anyone complain when he saw Rhadamanthus, Aeacus, and Minos spent with years. Now Minos, while in his prime, had held great nations in fear of him by his very name; but at that time he was infirm with age and in fear of Miletus, son of Deione and Phoebus, proud of his youthful strength and parentage; and, though he believed that the youth was planning a rebellion against his kingdom, still he did not dare to banish him from his ancestral home. But of your own accord you fled, Miletus, and in your swift vessel crossed the Aegean sea and on the shores of Asia built a city which still bears its founder's name. There, while wandering along the banks of her father's winding stream, Cyanee, a nymph of unrivalled beauty, daughter of Maeander, who oft returns upon his former course, was known by you; and of this union Byblis and Caunus, twin progeny, were born.

Byblis is a warning that girls should not love unlawfully, Byblis, smitten with a passion for her brother, the grandson of Apollo. She loved him not as a brother, nor as a sister should. At first, indeed, she did not recognize the fires of love, nor think it wrong often to kiss him, often to throw her arms about her brother's neck, and she was long deceived mendacique diu pietatis fallitum umbra. 460

paulatim declinat amor, visuraque fratrem culta venit, nimiumque cupit formosa videri et siqua est illic formosior, invidet illi.

sed nondum manifesta sibi est, nullumque sub illo igne facit votum, verumtamen aestuat intus. 465 iam dominum appellat, iam nomina sanguinis odit, Byblida iam mavult, quam se vocet ille sororem.

Spes tamen obscenas animo demittere non est ausa suo vigilans; placida resoluta quiete saepe videt quod amat: visa est quoque iungere fratri

corpus et erubuit, quamvis sopita iacebat.
somnus abit; silet illa diu repetitque quietis ipsa suae speciem dubiaque ita mente profatur:
"me miseram! tacitae quid vult sibi noctis imago?
quam nolim rata sit! cur haec ego somnia vidi? 475 ille quidem est oculis quamvis formosus iniquis et placet, et possim, si non sit frater, amare, et me dignus erat. verum nocet esse sororem.
dummodo tale nihil vigilans, committere temptem, saepe licet simili redeat sub imagine somnus!

testis abest somno, nec obest imitata voluptas.
pro Venus et tenera volucer cum matre Cupido, gaudia quanta tuli! quam me manifesta libido contigit! ut iacui totis resoluta medullis!
ut meminisse iuvat! quamvis brevis illa voluptas 485 noxque fuit praeceps et coeptis invida nostris.

"O ego, si liceat mutato nomine iungi, by the semblance of sisterly affection. But gradually this affection changed to love: carefully adorned she came to see her brother, too anxious to seem lovely in his sight; and if any other seemed more beautiful to him, she envious her. But not yet did she have a clear vision of herself, felt no desire, prayed for no joy of love; but yet the hidden fire burned on. Now she called him her lord, now hated the name of brother, and wished him to call her Byblis, rather than sister.

Still in her waking hours she does not let her mind dwell on impure desires; but when she is relaxed in peaceful slumber, she often has visions of her love: she sees herself clasped in her brother's arms and blushes, though she lies sunk in sleep. When sleep has fled, she lies still for long and pictures again the visions of her slumber and at last, with wavering mind, she exclaims: "Oh, wretched girl that I am! What means this vision of the night? Oh, but I would not have it so! Why do I have such dreams? He is indeed beautiful, even to eyes that look unkindly on him, and is pleasing, and I could love him if he were not my brother; and he would be worthy of me; but it is my bane that I am his sister. If only when I am awake I make trial of no such thing, still may sleep often return with a dream like that! There's no one to tell in sleep, and there is no harm in imagined joy. O Venus and winged Cupid with thy soft mother, how happy I was! How real my joy seemed! How my very heart melted within me as I lay! How sweet to remember it! And yet 'twas but a fleeting pleasure, and night was headlong and envious of the joys before me.

"Oh, if I could only change my name and be joined quam bene, Caune, tuo poteram nurus esse parenti!
quam bene, Caune, meo poteras gener esse parenti!
omnia, di facerent, essent communia nobis, 490 praeter avos: tu me vellem generosior esses!
nescio quam facies igitur, pulcherrime, matrem;
at mihi, quae male sum, quos tu, sortita parentes, nil nisi frater eris. quod obest, id habebimus unum.
quid mihi significant ergo mea visa? quod autem 495 omnia pondus habent? an habent et somnia pondus?
di melius! di nempe suas habuere sorores.
sic Saturnus Opem iunctam sibi sanguine duxit, Oceanus Tethyn, Iunonem rector Olympi. sunt superis sua iura! quid ad caelestia ritus 500 exigere humanos diversaque foedera tempto?
aut nostro vetitus de corde fugabitur ardor, aut hoc si nequeo, peream, precor, ante toroque mortua componar, positaque det oscula frater.
et tamen arbitrium quaerit res ista duorum!
505
finge placere mihi: scelus esse videbitur illi.
"At non Aeolidae thalamos timuere sororum!
unde sed hos novi? cur haec exempla paravi?
quo feror? obscenae procul hinc discidite flammae nec, nisi qua fas est germanae, frater ametur! 510 si tamen ipse meo captus prior esset amore, forstian illius possem indulgere furori.
515
ergo ego, quae fuerim non reiectura petentem, ipsa petam! poterisne loqui? poterisne fateri?
coget amor, potero! vel, si pudor ora tenebit, littera celatos arcana fatebitur ignes."
to you, how good a daughter, Caunus, I could be to your father, how good a son, Caunus, you could be to mine! we should have all things in common, if heaven allowed, except our grandparents. I should want you to be better born than I! You will be someone's husband, I suppose, O most beautiful; but to me, who have unfortunately drawn the same parents as yourself, you will never be anything but brother: what is our bane, that alone we shall have in common. What then do my dreams mean for me!—But what weight have dreams? or have dreams really weight? The gods forbid!—But surely the gods have loved their sisters; so Saturn married Ops, blood-kin of his; Oceanus, Tethys; the ruler of Olympus, Juno. But the gods are a law unto themselves! Why should I try to measure human fashions by divine and far different customs? Either my passion will flee from my heart if I forbid its presence, or if I cannot do this, I pray that I may die before I yield, and be laid out dead upon my couch, and as I lie there may my brother kiss my lips. And yet that act requires the will of two! Supposing it please me, it will seem a crime to him.

"Yet the Aeolidae did not shun their sisters' chambers! But whence do I know these? Why do I quote these examples? Whither am I tending? Get you far hence, immodest love, and let not my brother be loved at all, save in sisterly fashion! And yet if he himself had first been smitten with love for me, I might perchance smile upon his passion. Let me myself, then, woo him, since I should not have rejected his wooing! And can you speak? can you confess? Love will compel me: I can! or if shame holds my lips, a private letter shall confess my secret love." Hoc placet, haec dubiam vicit sententia mentem.
in latus erigitur cubitoque innixa sinistro
"viderit: insanos" inquit "fateamur amores!
ei mihi, quo labor? quem mens mea concipit ignem?"
et meditata manu componit verba trementi.
dextra tenet ferrum, vacuum tenet altera ceram.
incipit et dubitat, scribit damnatque tabellas, et notat et delet, mutat culpique probatque inque vicem sumptas ponit positasque resumit.

quid velit ignorat; quicquid factura videtur, displexet. in vultu est audacia mixta pudori.
scripta "soror" fuerat; visum est delere sororem verbaque correctis incidere talia ceris:
"quam, nisi tu dederis, non est habitura salutem, hanc tibi mittit amans: pudet, a, pudet edere nomen, et si quid cupiam quae (sine nomine vellem) posset agi mea causa meo, nec cognita Byblis ante forem, quam spes votorum certa fuisset.

"Esse quidem laesi poterat tibi pectoris index et color et macies et vultus et umida saepe lumina nec causa suspisia mota patenti et crebris amplexus, et quae, si forte notasti, oscula sentiri non esse sororia possent.
ipsa tamen, quamvis animo grave vulnus habebam, quamvis intus erat furor igneus, omnia feci (sunt mihi di testes), ut tandem sanior essem, pugnavique diu violenta Cupidinis arma effugere infelix, et plus, quam ferre puellam posse putes, ego dura tuli. superata fateri
This plan meets her approval; upon this her wavering mind decides. She half-way rises and, leaning upon her left elbow, says: “Let him see: let us confess our mad passion! Ah me! whither am I slipping? What hot love does my heart conceive?” And she proceeds to set down with a trembling hand the words she has thought out. In her right hand she holds her pen, in her left an empty waxen tablet. She begins, then hesitates and stops; writes on and hates what she has written; writes and erases; changes, condemns, approves; by turns she lays her tablets down and takes them up again. What she would do she knows not; on the point of action, she decides against it. Shame and bold resolution mingle in her face. She had begun with “sister”; but “sister” she decided to erase, and wrote these words on the amended wax: “A health to you, which, if you give it not to her, she will not have, one sends to you who loves you. Shamed, oh, she is ashamed to tell her name. And if you seek to know what I desire, I would that nameless I might plead my cause, and not be known as Byblis until my fond hopes were sure.

“You might have had knowledge of my wounded heart from my pale, drawn face, my eyes oft filled with tears, my sighs for no seeming cause, my frequent embraces and my kisses which you might have known, had you but marked them, were more than sisterly. Yet, though my heart was sore distressed, though full of hot passion, I have done everything (the gods are my witnesses) to bring myself to sanity. Long have I fought, unhappy that I am, to escape love’s cruel charge, and I have borne more than you would think a girl could bear. But I have been overborne and am forced to confess my cogor, openque tuam timidis exposcere votis.
tu servare potes, tu perdere solus amantem:
elige, utrum facias. non hoc inimica precatur, se quae, cum tibi sit iunctissima, iunctior esse expetit et vinclo tecum propiore ligari.

iura senes norint, et quid liceatque nefasque fasque sit, inquirant, legumque examina servent.
conveniens Venus est annis temeraria nostris.
quid liceat, nescimus adhuc, et cuncta licere credimus, et sequimur magnorum exempla deorum.
nec nos aut durus pater aut reverentia famae aut timor impediet: tamen ut sit causa timendi, dulci fraterno sub nomine furta tegemus, est mihi libertas tecum secreta loquendi, et damus amplexus, et iungimus oscula coram.

quantum est, quod desit? miserere fatentis amores, et non fassurae, nisi cogeret ultimus ardur, neve merere meo subscribi causa sepulchro.”

Talia nequiquam peraranat plena reliquit cera manum, summusque in margine versus adhaesit.
protinus impressa signat sua crimina gemma, quam tinxit lacrimis (linguam defecerat umor):
deque suis unum famulis pudibunda vocavit, et pavidum blandita “fer has, fidissimae, nostro”— dixit, et adiecit longo post tempore “fratri.”
cum daret, elapsae manibus cecidere tabellae. omine turbata est, misit tamen. apta minister love, and with timid prayers to beg help of you. For you alone can save, you only can destroy your lover. Choose which you will do. It is no enemy who prays to you, but one who, though most closely joined to you, seeks to be more fully joined and to be bound by a still closer tie. Let old men know propriety and talk of what is fitting, what is right and wrong, and preserve the nice discrimination of the laws. But love is compliant and heedless for those of our age. What is allowed we have not yet discovered, and we believe all things allowed; and in this we do but follow the example of the gods. You and I have no harsh father, no care for reputation, no fear to hold us back. And yet even though there be cause for fear, beneath the sweet name of brother and sister we shall conceal our stolen love. I have full liberty to talk apart with you; we may embrace and kiss in open view of all. How much still is lacking? Pity her who confesses to you her love, but who would not confess if the utmost love did not compel her; and let it not be written on my sepulchre that for your sake I died."

The tablet was full when she had traced these words doomed to disappointment, the last line coming to the very edge. Straightway she stamped the shameful letter with her seal which she moistened with her tears (for moisture failed her tongue). Then, blushing hotly, she called one of her attendants and with timorous and coaxing voice said: "Take these tablets, most faithful servant, to my—"; and after a long silence added, "brother." While she was giving them, the tablets slipped from her hands and fell. Though much perturbed by the omen, she still sent the letter. The servant, finding a fitting time, went to the brother and delivered to tempora nactus adit traditque fatentia verba. attonitus subita iuvenis Maeandrius ira proicit acceptas lecta sibi parte tabellas, vixque manus retinens trepidantis ab ore ministri, "dum licet, o! vetitae scelerate libidinis auctor, effuge!" ait "qui, si nostrum tua fata pudorem non traherent secum, poenas mihi morte dedisses." ille fugit pavidus, dominaeque ferocia Cauni dicta refert. palles audita, Bybli, repulsa, et pavet obsessum glaciali frigore corpus. mens tamen ut rediit, pariter rediere furores, linguaque vix tales icto dedit ære voces: "et merito! quid enim temeraria vulneris huius indicium feci? quid, quae celanda fuerunt, tam cito commisi properatis verba tabellis? ante erat ambiguus animi sententia dictis praetemptanda mihi. ne non sequeretur euntem, parte aliqua veli, qualis foret aura, notare debueram, tutoque mari decurrere, quae nunc non exploratis inplevi lintea ventis. auferor in scopulos igitur, subversaque toto obruor oceano, neque habent mea vela recursus. "Quid quod et omnibus certis prohibebar amori indulgere meo, tum cum mihi ferre iubenti excidit et fecit spes nostras cera caducas? nonne vel illa dies fuerat, vel tota voluntas, sed potius mutanda dies? deus ipse monebat signaque certa dabat, si non male sana fuissem. et tamen ipsa loqui, nec me committere cerae him the message of confession. The grandson of Maeander, in a passion of sudden rage, threw down the tablets which he had taken and read half through, and, scarcely restraining his hands from the trembling servant’s throat, he cried: “Flee while you may, you rascally promoter of a lawless love! But if your fate did not involve our own disgrace, you should have paid the penalty for this with death.” He fled in terror and reported to his mistress her brother’s savage answer. When, Byblis, you heard that your love had been repulsed, you grew pale, and your whole body trembled in the grip of an icy chill. But when your senses came back, your mad love came back with equal force; and then with choked and feeble utterance you spoke: “Deservedly I suffer! For why did I so rashly tell him of this wound of mine? Why was I in such a haste to commit to tablets what should have been concealed? I should first have tried his disposition towards me by obscure hints. That my voyage might have a favourable wind, I should first have tested with a close-reefed sail what the wind was, and so have fared in safety; but now with sails full spread I have encountered unexpected winds. And so my ship is on the rocks; with the full force of ocean am I overwhelmed, and have no power to turn back upon my course.

“Nay, by the clearest omens I was warned not to confess my love, at the time when the letter fell from my hand as I bade my servant bear it, and taught me that my hopes must fall as well. Should not that day or my whole purpose—say rather, should not the day have been postponed? God himself warned me and gave me clear signs had I not been mad with love. And yet I should have told him with my own lips, I should in person have confessed my debueram. praesensque meos aperire furores.
vidisset lacrimas, vultum vidisset amantis;
plura loqui poteram, quam quae cepere tabellae.
invito potui circumdare brachia collo, et, si reicerer, potui moritura videri amplectique pedes, adfusaque poscere vitam.
omnia fecisset, quorum si singula duram flectere non poterant, potuissent omnia, mentem.
forsitan et missi sit quaedam culpa ministri:
non adiit apte, nec legit idonea, credo, tempora, nec petiiit horamque animumque vacantem.
"Haecnucere mihi. neque enim est de tigridenatus nec rigidas silices solidumve in pectore ferrum aut adamanta gerit, nec lac bibit ille leaenae.
vinctetur! repetendus erit, nec taedia coepti ulla mei capiam, dum spiritus iste manebit.
nam primum, si facta mihi revocare liceret, non coepisse fuit: coepta expugnare secundum est.
quippe nec ille potest, ut iam mea vota reliquam, non tamen ausorum semper memor esse meorum.
et, quia desierim, leviter voluisse videbor, aut etiam temptasse illum insidiisque petisse, vel certe non hoc, qui plurimus urguet et urit pectora nostra, deo, sed victa libidine credar;
denique iam nequeo nil commisisse nefandum.
et scripsi et petii: temerata est nostra voluntas;
ut nihil adiciam, non possum innoxia dici.

46
passion, and not have trusted my inmost heart to waxen tablets! He should have seen my tears, he should have seen his lover's face; I could have spoken more than any tablets could hold; I could have thrown my arms about his unwilling neck and, if I were rejected, I could have seemed at the point of death, could have embraced his feet and, lying prostrate there, have begged for life. I should have done all things, which together might have won his stubborn soul if one by one they could not. Perhaps the servant whom I sent made some mistake: did not approach him rightly; chose an unsuiting time, I suppose, nor sought an hour and mind that was free.

"All this has wrought against me. For he is no tigress' son; he has no heart of hard flint or solid iron or adamant; no lioness has suckled him. He shall be conquered! I must go to him again; nor shall I weary in my attempts while I have breath left in my body. For if it were not too late to undo what I have done, it was the best thing not to have begun at all; the second best is to win through with what I have begun. Though I should now abandon my suit, he cannot help remembering always how far I have already dared. And in that case, just because I did give up, I shall seem either to have been fickle in my desire, or else to have been trying to tempt him and catch him in a snare. Whichever of these he thinks of me, he certainly will not believe that I have been overcome by that god who more than all others rules and inflames our hearts, but actuated by lust alone. In short, I cannot now undo the wrong that I have done. I have both written and have wooed him and rash I was to do so. Though I do nothing more, quod superest, multum est in vota, in crimina parvum."
dixit, et (incertae tanta est discordia mentis,) cum pigeat temptasse, libet temptare. modumque exit et infelix committit saepe repelli. mox ubi finis abest, patriam fugit ille nefasque, inque peregrina ponit nova moenia terra.

Tum vero maestam tota Miletida mente defecisse ferunt, tum vero a pectore vestem diripuit planxitque suos furibunda lacertos; iamque palam est demens, inconcessamque fatetur spem veneris, sine qua patriam invisosque penates deserit, et profugi sequitur vestigia fratris. utque tuo motae, proles Semeleia, thyro Ismarias celeb rant repetita triennia bacchae, Byblida non aliter latos ululasse per agros Bubasides videre nurus. quibus illa relictis Caras et armiferos Lelegas Lyciamque pererrat. iam Cragon et Lomyren Xanthique reliquerat undas, quoque Chimaera iugo mediis in partibus ignem, pectus et ora leae, caudam serpentis habe bat. deficiunt silvae, cum tu lassata sequendo concidis, et dura positis tellure capillis, Bybli, iaces, frondesque tuo premis ore caducas. saepe etiam nymphae teneris Lelegeides ulnis tollere conantur, saepe, ut medeatur amori, praecipiunt, surdaeque adhibent solacia menti. muta iacet, viridesque suis tenet unguibus herbas Byblis, et unectat lacrimarum gramina rivus.

48
I cannot seem other than guilty in his sight. As for the rest, I have much to hope and naught to fear." Thus does she argue; and (so great is her uncertainty of soul), while she is sorry that she tried at all, she wants to try again. The wretched girl tries every art within her power, but is repeatedly repulsed. At length, when there seemed to be no limit to her importunity, the youth fled from his native land and from this shameful wooing, and founded a new city in another land.

Then, they say, the wretched daughter of Miletus lost all control of reason; she tore her garments from her breast, and in mad passion beat her arms. Now before all the world she rages and publicly proclaims her hope of unlawful love, disappointed in which she forsakes her land and her hated home and follows her fleeing brother. And just as, crazed by thy thyrsus, O son of Semele, thy Ismarian worshippers throng thy triennial orgies, so the women of Bubassus beheld Byblis go shrieking through the broad fields. Leaving these behind, she wandered through the land of Caria, by the well-armed Leleges and the country of the Lycians. And now she had passed by Cragus and Limyre and Xanthus' stream and the ridge where dwelt Chimaera, that fire-breathing monster with lion's head and neck and serpent's tail. Clear beyond the wooded ridge she went, and then at last, wearied with pursuing, you fell, O Byblis, and lay there with your hair streaming over the hard ground and your face buried in the fallen leaves. Often the Lelegeian nymphs try to lift her in their soft arms, often advise her how she may cure her love and offer comfort to her unheeding soul. Byblis lies without a word,

---

1 Caunus, in south-western Caria.
2 A town in Caria.
naidas his venam, quae numquam arescre posset, subposuisse ferunt. quid enim dare maius habebant? protinus, ut secto piceae de cortice guttae, utve tenax gravida manat tellure bitumen; utve sub adventu spirantis lene favoni sole remollescit quae frigore constitit unda; sic lacrimis consumpta suis Phoebeīa Byblis vertitur in fontem, qui nunc quoque vallibus illis nomen habet dominae, nigraque sub ilice manat. 665

Fama novi centum Creteas forsitan urbes implesset monstri, si non miracula nuper Iphide mutata Crete propiora tulisset. proxima Gnosiac o nam quondam Phaestia regno progenuit tellus ignotum nomine Ligdum, ingenua de plebe virum, nec census in illo nobilitate sua maior, sed vita fidesque inculpata fuit. gravidae qui coniugis aures vocibus his monuit, cum iam prope partus adesset.

"quae voveam, duo sunt: minimo ut relevere dolore, utque marem parias. onerosior altera sors est, et vires fortuna negat. quod abominor: ergo edita forte tuo fuerit si femina partu,— invitus mando; pietas, ignosce!—necetur."

dixerat, et lacrimis vultum lavere profusis, tam qui mandabat, quam cui mandata dabantur. sed tamen usque suum vanis Telethusa maritum clutching the green herbs with her fingers, and watering the grass with her flowing tears. The naiads are said to have given her a vein of tears which could never dry; for what greater gift had they to bestow? Straightway, as drops of pitch drip forth from the gashed pine-bark; as sticky bitumen oozes from rich heavy earth; or as, at the approach of the soft breathing west-wind, the water which had stood frozen with the cold now melts beneath the sun; so Phoebean Byblis, consumed by her own tears, is changed into a fountain, which to this day in those valleys has the name of its mistress, and issues forth from under a dark ilex-tree.

The story of this unnatural passion would, perhaps, have been the talk of Crete's hundred towns, if Crete had not lately had a wonder of its own in the changed form of Iphis. For there once lived in the Phaestian country, not far from the royal town of Gnosus, a man named Ligdus, otherwise unknown, of free-born but humble parentage; nor was his property any greater than his birth. But he was of blameless life and trustworthy. When now the time drew near when his wife should give birth to a child, he warned and instructed her with these words: "There are two things which I would ask of Heaven: that you may be delivered with the least possible pain, and that your child may be a boy. Girls are more trouble, and fortune has denied them strength. Therefore (and may Heaven save the mark!), if by chance your child should prove to be a girl (I hate to say it, and may I be pardoned for the impiety), let her be put to death." He spoke, and their cheeks were bathed in tears, both his who ordered and hers to whom the command was given. Nevertheless, Telethusa ceaselessly implored her husband sollicitat precibus, ne spem sibi ponat in arto.
OVID

certa sua est Ligdo sententia. iamque ferendo vix erat illa gravem maturo pondere ventrem, cum medio noctis spatio sub imagine somni Inachis ante torum, pompa comitata sacrorum, aut stetit aut visa est. inerat lunaria fronti cornua cum spicis nitido flaventibus auro et regale decus; cum qua latrator Anubis, sanctaque Bubastis, variusque coloribus Apis, quitque premit vocem digitoque silentia suadet;
sistraque crant, numquamque satis quaesitus Osiris, plenaque somniferis serpens peregrina venenis.
tum velut excussam somno et manifesta videntem sic adfata dea est: "pars o Telethusa mearum, pone graves curas, mandataque falle mariti.
nec dubita, cum te partu Lucina levarit, tollere quicquid erit. dea sum auxiliaris opemque exorata fero; nec te coluisse quereris ingratum numen." monuit, thalamoque recessit.
laeta toro surgit, purasque ad sidera supplex Cressa manus tollens, rata sint sua visa, precatur.

Ut dolor increvit, seque ipsum pondus in auras expulit, et nata est ignaro femina patre, iussit ali mater puerum mentita. fidemque res habuit, neque erat ficti nisi conscia nutrix.
METAMORPHOSES BOOK IX

(though all in vain) not so to straiten her expectation; but Ligdus remained steadfast in his determination. And now the time was at hand when the child should be born, when at midnight, in a vision of her dreams, she saw or seemed to see the daughter⁠¹ of Inachus standing before her bed, accompanied by a solemn train of sacred beings. She had crescent horns upon her forehead, and a wheaten garland yellow with bright gold about her head, a sight of regal beauty. Near her were seen the dog Anubis, sacred Bubastis, dappled Apis, and the god ² who enjoins silence with his finger on his lips; there also were the sacred rattles, and Osiris, for whom none ever search enough, and the Egyptian serpent swelling with sleep-producing venom. She seemed to be thoroughly awake and to see all things about her clearly as the goddess spoke to her: "O Telethusa, one of my own worshippers, put away your grievous cares, and think not to obey your husband's orders. And do not hesitate, when Lucina has delivered you, to save your child, whatever it shall be. I am the goddess who bring help and succour to those who call upon me; nor shall you have cause to complain that you have worshipped a thankless deity." Having so admonished her, the goddess left the chamber. Then joyfully the Cretan woman arose from her bed, and, raising her innocent hands in supplication to the stars, she prayed that her vision might come true.

When now her pains increased and the birth was accomplished, and the child proved to be a girl (though without the father's knowledge), the mother, with intent to deceive, bade them feed the boy. Circumstances favoured her deceit, for the nurse was

¹ i.e. Io, worshipped as the goddess Isis. See i. 747.
² Harpocrates.
OVID

vota pater solvit, nomenque inponit avitum: Iphis avus fuerat. gavisa est nomine mater, quod commune foret, nec quemquam falleret illo. 710 inde incepta pia mendacia fraude latebant.
cultus erat pueri; facies, quam sive puellae, sive dares puero, fuerat formosus uterque.

Tertius interea decimo successerat annus:
cum pater, Iphi, tibi flavam despondet Ianthen, 715 inter Phaestiadas quae laudatissima formae dote fuit virgo, Dictaeco nata Teleste.
par aetas, par forma fuit, primasque magistris accepere artes, elementa aetatis, ab isdem.
hinc amor ambarum tetigit rude pectus, et acuum vulnus utrique dedit, sed erat fiducia dispar: 721 coniugium pactaeque exspectat tempora taedae, quamque virum putat esse, virum fore credit Ianthe; Iphis amat, qua posse frui desperat, et auget hoe ipsum flammas, ardetque in virgine virgo 725 vixque tenens lacrimas "quis me manet exitus," inquit
"cognita quam nulli, quam prodigiosa novaeque cura tenet Veneris? si di mihi parcere vellent, parcere debuerant; si non, et perdere vellent, naturale malum saltem et de more dedissent. 730 nee vaccam vaccae, nec equas amor urit equarum:
urit oves aries, sequitur sua femina cervum.
sic et aves cocunt, interque animalia cunceta

54
the only one who knew of the trick. The father paid his vows and named the child after its grandfather: the grandfather had been Iphis. The mother rejoiced in the name; for it was of common gender and she could use it without deceit. And so the trick, begun with pious fraud, remained undetected. The child was dressed like a boy, and its face would have been counted lovely whether you assigned it to a girl or boy.

Meanwhile thirteen years passed by; and then your father found you a bride, O Iphis, in golden-haired Ianthe, a girl the most praised among the Phaestian women for the rich dower of her beauty, the daughter of Cretan Telestes. The two were of equal age and equal loveliness, and from the same teachers had they received their first instruction in childish rudiments. Hence love came to both their hearts all unsuspected and filled them both with equal longing. But they did not both love with equal hope: Ianthe looked forward confidently to marriage and the fulfilment of her troth, and believed that she whom she thought to be a man would some day be her husband. Whereas Iphis loved without hope of her love's fulfilment, and for this very reason loved all the more—a girl madly in love with another girl. Scarcely holding back her tears, "Oh, what will be the end of me," she said, "whom a love possesses that no one ever heard of, a strange and monstrous love? If the gods wished to save me they should have saved me; if not, and they wished to ruin me, they should at least have given me some natural woe, within the bounds of experience. Cows do not love cows, nor mares, mares; but the ram desires the sheep, and his own doe follows the stag. So also birds mate, and in the whole animal world femina femineo conrepta cupidine nulla est. vellcm nulla forem! ne non tamen omnia Crete monstra ferat, taurum dilexit filia Solis, femina nempe marem. meus est furiosior illo, si verum profitemur, amor, tamen illa secura est spem Veneris; tamen illa dolis et imagine vaccae passa bovem est, et erat, qui deciperetur, adulter. 740 huc licet ex toto sollertia confluat orbe, ipse licet revolet ceratis Daedalus alis, quid faciet? num me puerum de virgine doctis artibus efficiet? num te mutabit, Ianthe?

"Quin animum firmas, teque ipsa recolligis, Iphi, consiliiique inopes et stultos excutis ignes? quid sis nata, vide, nisi te quoque decipis ipsa, et pete quod fas est, et ama quod femina debes! spes est, quae capiat, spes est, quae pascat amorem. hanc tibi res adimit. non te custodia caro arcet ab amplexu, nec cauti cura mariti, non patris asperitas, non se negat ipsa roganti, nec tamen est potienda tibi, nec, ut omnia fiant, esse potes felix, ut dique hominesque laborent. nunc quoque votorum nulla est pars vana meorum, dique mihi faciles, quicquid valuer, dederunt; 756 quodque ego, vult genitor, vult ipsa, socerque futurus. at non vult natura, potentior omnibus istis, quae mihi sola nocet. venit ecce optabile tempus, luxque iugalis adest, et iam mea fiet Ianthe— 760 nec mihi continget: mediis sitiemus in undis.
there is no female smitten with love for female. I would I were no female! Nevertheless, that Crete might produce all monstrous things, the daughter of the Sun loved a bull—a female to be sure, and male; my passion is more mad than that, if the truth be told. Yet she had some hope of her love's fulfilment; yet she enjoyed her bull by a trick and the disguise of the heifer, and it was the lover who was deceived. Though all the ingenuity in the world should be collected here, though Daedalus himself should fly back on waxen wings, what could he do? With all his learned arts could he make me into a boy from a girl? or could he change you, Ianthe?

"Nay, then, be strong of soul, take courage, Iphis, and banish from your heart this hopeless, foolish love. See what you were born, unless you yourself deceive yourself as well as others; seek what is lawful, and love as a woman ought to love! It is hope of fulfilment that begets love, and hope that keeps it alive. And of this hope the nature of things deprives you. No guardian keeps you from her dear embrace, no watchfulness of a jealous husband, no cruel father; nor does she herself deny your suit. And yet you cannot have her, nor can you be happy, though all things should favour you, though gods and men should work for you. And even now none of my prayers have been denied; the gods, compliant, have given me whatever was theirs to give; and what I wish my father wishes, she herself and her father all desire. But nature will not have it so, nature, more mighty than they all, who alone is working my distress. And lo, the longed-for time is come, my wedding-day is at hand, and soon Ianthe will be mine—and yet not mine. In the midst of water we pronuba quid Iuno, quid ad haec, Hymenae, venitis sacra, quibus qui ducat abest, ubi nubimus ambae?" pressit ab his vocem. nec lenius altera virgo aestuat, utque celer venias, Hymenae, precatur. quod petit haec, Telethusa timens modo tempora differt, nunc f facto languore moram trahit, omina saepe visaque causatur. sed iam consumpserat omnem materiam ficti, dilataque tempora taedae institerant, unusque dies restabat. at illa crinalem capiti vittam nataeque sibique detrahit, et passis aram complexa capillis:

1 Pasiphaë.

"Isi, Paraetonium Mareoticaque arva Pharonque quae colis, et septem digestum in cornua Nilum: fer, precor," inquit "opem, nostroque medere timori! te, dea, te quondam tuaque haec insignia vidi cunctaque cognovi, sonitum comitesque facesque... sistrorum, memorique animo tua iussa notavi. quod videt haec lucem, quod non ego punior, ecce consilium munusque tuum est. miserere duarum, auxilioque iuva!" lacrimae sunt verba secutae. visa dea est movisse suas, (et moverat,) aras, et templi tremuere fores, imitataque lunam cornua fulserunt, crepuitque sonabile sistrum. non secura quidem, fausto tamen omine laeta mater abit templo. sequitur comes Iphis euntem, quam solita est, maiore gradu, nec candor in ore permanet, et vires augentur, et acrior ipse est vultus, et incomptis brevior mensura capillis, shall thirst. Why do you come, Juno, goddess of brides, and Hymen, to these wedding rites, where no man takes the woman for his bride, but where both are brides?” She broke off speech with these words. The other maiden burned with equal love, and prayed, Hymen, that you would make haste to come. And Telethusa, fearing what Ianthe sought, put off the time, now causing delay because of a pretended sickness, often giving for reason some ill-omened vision she had seen. But now she had exhausted every possible excuse, and the postponed wedding-day was close at hand, and but one more day remained. Then the mother took the encircling fillets from her own and her daughter's heads, and with flowing locks she prayed, clinging to the altar: “O Isis, who dwellest in Paraetonium and the Marseotic fields and Pharos and the sevenfold waters of the Nile, help us, I pray, and heal our sore distress. Thee, goddess, thee and these thy symbols once I saw and recognized them all—the clashing sound, thy train, the torches, [the rattling] of the sistra—and with retentive mind I noted thy commands. That this, my daughter still looks on the light, that I have not been punished, behold, is all of thy counsel and thy gift. Pity us two, and help us with thy aid!” Tears followed on her words. The goddess seemed to move, nay, moved her altar, the doors of the temple shook, her moon-shaped horns shot forth gleams of light and the sistrum rattled noisily. Not yet quite free from care and yet rejoicing in the good omen, the mother left the temple; and Iphis walked beside her as she went, but with a longer stride than was her wont. Her face seemed of a darker hue, her strength seemed greater, her very features sharper, and her locks, all unadorned, were plusque vigoris adest, habuit quam femina. nam quae 790
femina nuper eras, puer es! date munera templis, nec timida gaudete fide! dant munera templis, addunt et titulum: titulus breve carmen habebat:

DOÑA • P U E R • S O L V I T • Q U A E • F E M I N A • V O V E R AT • I P H I S.

postera lux radiis latum patesecerat orbem, 795 cum Venus et Iuno sociosque Hymenaeus ad ignes conveniunt, potiturque sua puer Iphis Ianthe.
shorter than before. She seemed more vigorous than was her girlish wont. In fact, you who but lately were a girl are now a boy! Go, make your offerings at the shrines; rejoice with gladness unafraid! They make their offerings at the shrines and add a votive tablet; the tablet had this brief inscription: These gifts as man did Iphis pay which once as maid he vowed. The morrow's sun had revealed the broad world with its rays, when Venus, Juno, and Hymen met at the marriage fires, and the boy Iphis gained his Ianthe.
INDI PER INMENSUM CROCEO VE\'LATUS AMICTU
AETHERA DIGREDITUR CICONUMQUE HYMENAEUS AD ORAS TENDIT ET ORPHEA NEQUIquam VOCE VOCATUR.
AD\'FUIT ILLE QUIDEM, SED NEC SOLEMMNIA VERBA NEC LAETOS VULTUS NEC FELIX ATTULIT Omen.
FAX QUOQUE, QUAM TENUIT, LACRIMOSO STRIDULA FUMO USQUE FUIT NULLOSQUE INVENIT MOTIBUS IGNES.
EXITUS AUSCPIO GRAVIOR: NAM NUPTA PER HERBAS DUM NOVA NAIADEUM TURBA COMITATA VAGATUR, OCCIDIT IN TALUM SERPENTIS DENTE RECEPTO.
QUAM SATIS AD SUPERAS POSTQUAM RHODOPEIUS ANRAS DEFLEVIT VATES, NE NON TEMPTARET ET UMBRAS, AD STYGA TAENARIA EST AUSUS DESCENDERE PORTA
PERQUE LEVES POPULOS SIMULACRAQUE FUNCTA SEPULCRO PERSEPHONE\'N ADIIT INAMOENAQUE REGNA TENTEN\'TEM UMBRARUM DOMINUM PULSISQUE AD CARMINA NERVIS SIC AIT: "O positi sub terra numina mundi, in quem reccidimus, quicquid mortale creamur, si licet et falsi positis ambagibus oris
VERA LOQUI SINITIS, NON HUC, UT OPACA VIDEREM
TARTARA, DESCENDI, NEC UTI VILLOSA COLUBRIS TERNA MEDUSA\'EI VINCIREM GUTTURA MONSTRI 64
BOOK X

Thence through the boundless air Hymen, clad in a saffron mantle, departed and took his way to the country of the Ciconians, and was summoned by the voice of Orpheus, though all in vain. He was present, it is true; but he brought neither the hallowed words, nor joyous faces, nor lucky omen. The torch also which he held kept sputtering and filled the eyes with smoke, nor would it catch fire for any brandishing. The outcome of the wedding was worse than the beginning; for while the bride was strolling through the grass with a group of naiads in attendance, she fell dead, smitten in the ankle by a serpent's tooth. When the bard of Rhodope had mourned her to the full in the upper world, that he might try the shades as well he dared to go down to the Stygian world through the gate of Taenarus. And through the unsubstantial throngs and the ghosts who had received burial, he came to Persephone and him who rules those unlovely realms, lord of the shades. Then, singing to the music of his lyre, he said: "O ye divinities who rule the world which lies beneath the earth, to which we all fall back who are born mortal, if it is lawful and you permit me to lay aside all false and doubtful speech and tell the simple truth: I have not come down hither to see dark Tartarus, nor yet to bind the three necks of Medusa's monstrous offspring, rough with serpents. The cause causa viae est coniunx, in quam calcata venenum vipera diffudit crescentesque abstulit annos.
posse pati volui nec me temptasse negabo:
vicit Amor. supera deus hic bene notus in ora est;
an sit et hic, dubito: sed et hic tamen auguror esse, famaque si veteris non est mentita rapinae, vos quoque iunxit Amor. per ego haec loca plena timoris,
per Chaos hoc ingens vastique silentia regni, Eurydices, oro, properata retexite fata.
onnia debemur vobis, paulumque morati serius aut citius sedem properamus ad unam.
tendimus hic omnes, haec est domus ultima, vosque humani generis longissima regna tenetis.
haec quoque, cum iustos matura peregerit annos, iuris erit vestri: pro munere poscimus usum;
quodsi fata negant veniam pro coniuge, certum est nolle redire mihi: Ieto gaudete duorum."

Talia dicentem nervosque ad verba moventem exsangues flebant animae; nec Tantalus undam captavit refugam, stupuitque Ixionis orbis, nec carpsere iecur volucres, urnisque vacarunt Belides, inque tuo sedisti, Sisyphe, saxo.
tunc primum lacrimis victarum carmine fama est Eumenidum maduisse genas, nec regia coniunx sustinet oranti nec, qui regit ima, negare, Eurydicesque vocant: umbras erat illa recentes inter et incessit passu de vulnere tardo.
hanc simul et legem Rhodopeius accipit Orpheus, of my journey is my wife, into whose body a trodden serpent shot his poison and so snatched away her budding years. I have desired strength to endure, and I will not deny that I have tried to bear it. But Love has overcome me, a god well-known in the upper world, but whether here or not I do not know; and yet I surmise that he is known here as well, and if the story of that old-time ravishment is not false, you, too, were joined by Love. By these fearsome places, by this huge void and these vast and silent realms, I beg of you, unravel the fates of my Eurydice, too quickly run. We are in all things due to you, and though we tarry on earth a little while, slow or swift we speed to one abode. Hither we all make our way; this is our final home; yours is the longest sway over the human race. She also shall be yours to rule when of ripe age she shall have lived out her allotted years. I ask the enjoyment of her as a boon; but if the fates deny this privilege for my wife, I am resolved not to return. Rejoice in the death of two."

As he spoke thus, accompanying his words with the music of his lyre, the bloodless spirits wept; Tantalus did not catch at the fleeing wave; Ixion's wheel stopped in wonder; the vultures did not pluck at the liver;¹ the Belides rested from their urns, and thou, O Sisyphus, diest sit ἐπὶ τὸν τοιχόμενον στήλην. Then first, tradition says, conquered by the song, the cheeks of the Eumenides were wet with tears; nor could the queen nor he who rules the lower world refuse the suppliant. They called Eurydice. She was among the new shades and came with steps halting from her wound. Orpheus, the Thracian, then received his wife and with her this condition, that he

¹ i.e. of Tityus.
ne flectat retro sua lumina, donec Avernas exierit valles; aut inrita dona futura.
carpitur adclivis per muta silentia trames, arduus, obscurus, caligine densus opaca, nec procul afuerunt telluris margine summae: 55 hic, ne deficeret, metuens avidusque videndi flexit amans oculos, et protinus illa relapsa est.
bracchiaque intendens prendique et prendere certans nil nisi cedentes infelix arripit auras, 59 iamque iterum moriens non est de coniuge quicquam questa suo (quid enim nisi se quereretur amatam?) supremumque "vale," quod iam vix auribus ille acciperet, dixit revolutaque rursus eodem est.

Non aliter stupuit gemina nece coniugis Orpheus, quam tria qui timidus, medio portante catenas, 65 colla canis vidit, quem non pavor ante reliquit, quam natura prior saxo per corpus oborto, quiue in se crimen traxit voluitque videri Olenos esse nocens, tuque, o confissa figureae infelix Lethaea tuae, iunctissima quondam pectora, nunc lapides, quos umida sustinet lde.
orantem frustraque iterum transire volentem portitor arcuerat: septem tamen ille diebus squalidus in ripa Cereris sine munere sedit; cura dolorque animi lacrimaeque alimenta fuere. 75 should not turn his eyes backward until he had gone forth from the valley of Avernus, or else the gift would be in vain. They took the up-sloping path through places of utter silence, a steep path, indistinct and clouded in pitchy darkness. And now they were nearing the margin of the upper earth, when he, afraid that she might fail him, eager for sight of her, turned back his longing eyes; and instantly she slipped into the depths. He stretched out his arms, eager to catch her or to feel her clasp; but, unhappy one, he clasped nothing but the yielding air. And now, dying a second time, she made no complaint against her husband; for of what could she complain save that she was beloved? She spake one last "farewell" which scarcely reached her husband's ears, and fell back again to the place whence she had come.

By his wife's double death Orpheus was stunned, like that frightened creature who saw the three-headed dog with chains on his middle neck, whose numbing terror left him only when his former nature left, and the petrifying power crept through his body; or like that Olenos, who took sin upon himself and was willing to seem guilty; and like you, luckless Lethaea, too boastful of your beauty, once two hearts joined in close embrace, but now two stones which well-watered Ida holds. Orpheus prayed and wished in vain to cross the Styx a second time, but the keeper drove him back. Seven days he sat there on the bank in filthy rags and with no taste of food. Care, anguish of soul, and tears were his nourishment. Complaining that the gods of 1 A man, unknown, who is said to have turned to stone at sight of Cerberus led in chains by Hercules.

2 See Index.
3 See Index.
esse deos Erebi crudeles questus, in altam se recipit Rhodopen pulsumque aquilonibus Haemum.

Tertius aequoreis inclusum Piscibus annum finierat Titan, omnemque refugierat Orpheus femineam Venerem, seu quod male cesserat illi, sive fidem dederat; multas tamen arbor habebat iungere se vati, multae doluere repulsae ille etiam Thracum populis fuit auctor amorem in teneros transferre mares citraque iuvantam aetatis breve ver et primos carpere flores.

Collis erat collemque super planissima campi area, quam viridem faciebant graminis herbae:
umbra loco deerrat; qua postquam parte resedit dis genitus vates et fila sonantia movit, umbra loco venit: non Chaonis afuit arbor,
non nemus Heliadum, non frondibus aesculus altis, nec tiliae molles, nec fagus et innuba laurus, et coryli fragiles et fraxinus utilis hastis enodisque abies curvataque glandibus ilex et platanus genialis acerque coloribus inpar amnicolaeque simul salices et aquatica lotos perpetuoque vires buxum tennesque myricae et bicolor myrtus et bacis caerula timus.
vos quoque, flexipedes hederae, venistis et una pampineae vites et amictae vitibus ulmi ornique et piceae pomoque onerata rubenti arbutus et lentae, victoris praemia, palmae et succincta comas hirsutaque vertice pinus, grata deum matri, siquidem Cybeleius Attis exuit hac hominem truncuoque induruit illo.

Adfuit huic turbae metas imitata cupressus, Erebus were cruel, he betook himself to high Rhodope and wind-swept Haemus.

Three times had the sun finished the year and come to watery Pisces; and Orpheus had shunned all love of womankind, whether because it had gone so ill with him, or because he had so given his troth. Still, many women felt a passion for the bard; many grieved for their love repulsed. He set the example for the peoples of Thrace of giving his love to tender boys, and enjoying the springtime and first flower of their youth.

A hill there was, and on the hill a wide-extending plain, green with luxuriant grass; but the place was devoid of shade. When here the heaven-descended bard sat down and smote his sounding lyre, shade came to the place. There came the Chaonian oak, the grove of the Heliades, the oak with its deep foliage, the soft linden, the beech, the virgin laurel-tree, the brittle hazel, the ash, suitable for spear-shafts, the smooth silver-fir, the ilex-tree bending with acorns, the pleasant plane, the many-coloured maple, river-haunting willows, the lotus, lover of the pools, the evergreen boxwood, the slender tamarisk, the double-hued myrtle, the viburnum with its dark-blue berries. You also, pliant-footed ivy, came, and along with you tendrilled grapes, and the elm-trees, draped with vines; the mountain-ash, the forest-pines, the arbute-tree, loaded with ruddy fruit, the pliant palm, the prize of victory, the bare-trunked pine with broad, leafy top, pleasing to the mother of the gods, since Attis, dear to Cybele, exchanged for this his human form and stiffened in its trunk.

Amidst this throng came the cone-shaped cypress,

1 The poplar-trees.
nunc arbor, puer ante deo dilectus ab illo, qui citharam nervis et nervis temperat arcum.
namque sacer nymphis Carthaea tenentibus arva ingens cervus erat, lateque patentibus altas ipse suo capiti praebebat cornibus umbras.
cornua fulgebant auro, demissaque in armos pendebant tereti gemmata monilia collo.
bulla super frontem parvis argentea loris vincita movebatur parilique aetate: nitebant auribus e geminis circum cava tempora baceae; isque metu vacuus naturalique pavore deposito celebrare domos mulcendaque colla quamlibet ignotis manibus praebere solebat.
sed tamen ante alios, Ceae pulcherrime gentis, gratus erat, Cyparisse, tibi: tu pabula cervum ad nova, tu liquidi ducebas fontis ad undam, tu modo texebas varios per cornua flores, nunc eques in tergo residens huc laetus et illuc mollia purpureis frenabas ora capistris.

Aestus erat mediusque dies, solisque vapore concava litorei fervebant bracchia Cancri:
fessus in herbosa posuit sua corpora terra cervus et arborea frigus ducebat ab umbra.
hunc puer inprudens iaculo Cyparissus acuto fixit et, ut saevo morientem vulnere vidit, velle mori statuit. quae non solacia Phoebus dixit! ut hunc, leviter pro materiaque doleret, admonuit! gemit ille tamen munusque supremum hoc petit a superis, ut tempore lugeat omni.

iamque per inmensos egesto sanguine fletus in viride m verti coeperunt membra colorem, now a tree, but once a boy, beloved by that god who strings the lyre and strings the bow. For there was a mighty stag, sacred to the nymphs who haunt the Carthaean plains, whose wide-spreading antlers gave ample shade to his own head. His antlers gleamed with gold, and down on his shoulders hung a gem-mounted collar set on his rounded neck. Upon his forehead a silver boss bound with small thongs was worn, and worn there from his birth. Pendent from both his ears, about his hollow temples, were gleaming pearls. He, quite devoid of fear and with none of his natural shyness, frequented men's homes and let even strangers stroke his neck. But more than to all the rest, O Cyparissus, loveliest of the Cean race, was he dear to you. 'Twas you who led the stag to fresh pasturage and to the waters of the clear spring. Now would you weave bright garlands for his horns; now, sitting like a horseman on his back, now here, now there, would gleefully guide his soft mouth with purple reins.
'Twas high noon on a summer's day, when the spreading claws of the shore-loving Crab were burning with the sun's hot rays. Weary, the stag had lain down upon the grassy earth and was drinking in the coolness of the forest shade. Him, all unwittingly, the boy, Cyparissus, pierced with a sharp javelin, and when he saw him dying of the cruel wound, he resolved on death himself. What did not Phoebus say to comfort him! How he warned him to grieve in moderation and consistently with the occasion!
The lad only groaned and begged this as the boon he most desired from heaven, that he might mourn for ever. And now, as his life forces were exhausted by endless weeping, his limbs began to change to a green colour, and his locks, which but et, modo qui nivea pendent fronte capilli, horrida caesaries fieri sumptoque rigore sidereum gracili spectare cacumine caelum. 140 ingemuit tristisique deus “lugebere nobis lugebisque alios aderisque dolentibus” inquit.
Tale nemus vates attraxerat inque ferarum concilio medius turba volucrumque sedebat.
ut satis impulsas temptavit pollicee chordas 145 et sensit varios, quamvis diversa sonarent, concordare modos, hoc vocem carmine movit: “ab Iove, Musa parens, (cedunt Iovis omnia regno,) carmina nostra move! Iovis est mihi saepe potestas dicta prius: cecini plectro graviore Gigantas 150 sparsaque Phlegraeis victricia fulmina campis.
nune opus est leviore lyra, puerosque canamus dilicetos superis inconcessisque puellas ignibus attonitas meruisse libidine poenam.
“Rex superum Phrygii quondam Ganymedis amore arsit, et inventum est aliquid, quod Iuppiter esse, 156
quam quod erat, mallet. nulla tamen alite verti dignatur, nisi quae posset sua fulmina ferre.
nec mora, percusso mendacibus aere pennis abripit Iliaden; qui nune quoque poenula miscet 160 invitaque Iovi nectar Iunone ministrat.
“Te quoque, Amyclide, posuisset in aethere Phoebus, tristia si spatium ponendi fata dedissent.
qua licet, acternus tamen es, quotiensque repellit ver hiemem, Piscique Aries succedit aquoso, 165 74
now overhung his snowy brow, were turned to a bristling crest, and he became a stiff tree with slender top looking to the starry heavens. The god groaned and, full of sadness, said: "You shall be mourned by me, shall mourn for others, and your place shall always be where others grieve."

Such was the grove the bard had drawn, and he sat, the central figure in an assembly of wild beasts and birds. And when he had tried the chords by touching them with his thumb, and his ears told him that the notes were in harmony although they were of different pitch, he raised his voice in this song: "From Jove, O Muse, my mother—for all things yield to the sway of Jove—inspire my song! Oft have I sung the power of Jove before; I have sung the giants in a heavier strain, and the victorious bolts hurled on the Phlegraean plains. But now I need the gentler touch, for I would sing of boys beloved by gods, and maidens inflamed by unnatural love and paying the penalty of their lust.

"The king of the gods once burned with love for Phrygian Ganymede, and something was found which Jove would rather be than what he was. Still he did not deign to take the form of any bird save only that which could bear his thunderbolts. Without delay he cleft the air on his lying wings and stole away the Trojan boy, who even now, though against the will of Juno, mingles the nectar and attends the cups of Jove.

"You also, youth of Amyclae, Phoebus would have set in the sky, if grim fate had given him time to set you there. Still in what fashion you may you are immortal: as often as spring drives winter out and the Ram succeeds the watery Fish, so often

1 Hyacinthus.
tu totiens oreris viridique in caespite flores.
te meus ante omnes genitor dilexit, et orbe in medio positi caruerunt praeside Delphi, dum deus Eurotan immunitamque frequentat Sparten, nec citharae nec sunt in honore sagittae:
inmemor ipse sui non retia ferre recusat, non tenuisse canes, non per iuga montis in'qui ire comes, longaque alit adsuetudine flamas.
iamque fere medius Titan venientis et actae noctis erat spatioque pari distabat utrimque, corpora veste levant et suco pinguis olivi splendescunt latique ineunt certamina disci.
quam prius aerias libratum Phoebus in auras misit et oppositas disiecit pondere nubes; reccidit in solitam longo post tempore terram pondus et exhibuit iunctam cum viribus artem.
protinus inprudens actusque cupidine lusus tollere Taenarides orbem properabat, at illum dura repercussum subiecit in aera tellus in vultus, Hyacinthe, tuos. expalluit aeque quam puer ipse deus conlapsosque excipit artus, et modo te refovet, modo tristia vulnera siccat, nunc animam admotis fugientem sustinet herbis.
nil prosunt artes: erat inmedicabile vulnus.
ut, siquis violas rigidumve papaver in horto liliaque infringat fulvis horrentia linguis, marcida demittant subito caput illa vietum nec se sustineant spectentque cacumine terram:
do you come up and blossom on the green turf. Above all others did my father love you, and Delphi, set at the very centre of the earth, lacked its presiding deity while the god was haunting Eurotas' stream and Sparta,¹ the unwalled. No more has he thought for either or for bow. Entirely heedless of his usual pursuits, he refuses not to bear the nets, nor hold the dogs in leash, nor go as comrade along the rough mountain ridges. And so with long association he feeds his passion's flame. And now Titan was about midway 'twixt the coming and the banished night, standing at equal distance from both extremes; they strip themselves and, gleaming with rich olive oil, they try a contest with the broad discus. This, well poised, Phoebus sent flying through the air and cleft the opposite clouds with the heavy iron. Back to the wonted earth after long time it fell, revealing the hurler's skill and strength combined. Straightway the Taenarian² youth, heedless of danger and moved by eagerness for the game, ran out to take up the discus. But it bounded back into the air from the hard earth beneath full in your face, O Hyacinthus. The god grows deadly pale even as the boy, and catches up the huddled form; now he seeks to warm you again, now tries to staunch your dreadful wound, now strives to stay your parting soul with healing herbs. But his arts are of no avail; the wound is past all cure. Just as when in a garden, if someone should break off violets or stiff poppies or lilies, bristling with yellow stamens, fainting they suddenly droop their withered heads and can no longer stand erect, but gaze, with tops bowed low, upon the earth: so the

¹ The home of Hyacinthus.
² Poetic for Laconian, or Spartan.
OVID

sic vultus moriens iacet et defecta vigore ipsa sibi est oneri cervix umeroque recumbit. 195
'laberis, Oebalide, prima fraudate iuventa,' Phoebus ait 'videoque tuum, mea crimina, vulnus.
tu dolor es facinusque meum: mea dextera leto inscribenda tuo est. ego sum tibi funeris auctor.
quae mea culpa tamen, nisi si lusisse vocari culpa potest, nisi culpa potest et amasse vocari?
atque utinam merito vitam tecumve liceret reddere! quod quoniam fatali lege tenemur, semper eris mecum memorique haerebis in ore.
te lyra pulsa manu, te carmina nostra sonabunt, flosque novus scripto gemitus imitabere nostros, tempus et illud erit, quo se fortissimus heros addat in hunc florem folioque legatur eodem.' talia dum vero memorantur Apollinis ore, eece cruor, qui fusus humo signaverat herbas, desinit esse cruor, Tyrioque nitentior ostro flos oritur formamque capit, quam lilia, si non purpureus color his, argenteus esset in illis.
non satis hoc Phoebo est (is enim fuit auctor honoris):
ipse suos gemitus foliis inscribit, et Al Al flos habet inscriptum, funestaque littera ducta est.
nec genuisse pudet Sparten Hyacinthon: honorque durat in hoc aevi, celebrandaque more priorum annua praelata redeunt Hyacinthia pompa.
dying face lies prone, the neck, its strength all gone, cannot sustain its own weight and falls back upon the shoulders. 'Thou art fallen, defrauded of thy youth's prime, Oebalides,' says Phoebus, 'and in thy wound do I see my guilt; thou art my cause of grief and self-reproach; my hand must be proclaimed the cause of thy destruction. I am the author of thy death. And yet, what is my fault, unless my playing with thee can be called a fault, unless my loving thee can be called a fault? And oh, that I might give up my life for thee, so well-deserving, or give it up with thee! But since we are held from this by the laws of fate, thou shalt be always with me, and shalt stay on my mindful lips. Thee shall my lyre, struck by my hand, thee shall my songs proclaim. And as a new flower, by thy markings shalt thou imitate my groans. Also the time will come when a most valiant hero shall be linked with this flower, and by the same markings shall he be known.' While Apollo thus spoke with truth-telling lips, behold, the blood, which had poured out on the ground and stained the grass, ceased to be blood, and in its place there sprang a flower brighter than Tyrian dye. It took the form of the lily, save that the one was of purple hue, while the other was silvery white. Phoebus, not satisfied with this—for 'twas he who wrought the honouring miracle—himself inscribed his grieving words upon the leaves, and the flower bore the marks, Al AI, letters of lamentation, drawn thereon. Sparta, too, was proud that Hyacinthus was her son, and even to this day his honour still endures; and still, as the anniversary returns, as did their sires, they celebrate the Hyacinthia in solemn festival.

1 Descendant of Oebalus, Spartan.
2 Ajax.
OVID

"At si forte roges fecundam Amathuntam metallis, an genuisse velit Propoetidas, abnuat aequae atque illos, gemino quondam quibus aspera cornu frons erat, unde etiam nomen traxere Cerastae. ante fores horum stabat Iovis Hospitis ara; ignarus sceleris¹ quam siquis sanguine tinctam advena vidisset, mactatos crederet illie lactantes vitulos Amathusiacasque bidentes: hospes erat caeus! sacris offensa nefandis ipsa suas urbes Ophiusiaque arva parabat deserere alma Venus. 'sed quid loca grata, quid urbes peccavere meae? quod' dixit 'crimen in illis? exilio poenam potius gens inpia pendat vel nece vel siquid medium est mortisque fugaeque. idque quid esse potest, nisi versae poena figure?' dum dubitat, quo mutet eos, ad cornua vultum flexit et admonita est haec illis posse relinquqi grandiaque in torvos transformat membra iuvencos.

"Sunt tamen obscena Venere Propoetides ausae esse negare deam; pro quo sua numinis ira corpora cum fama primae vulgasse feruntur, utque pudor cessit, sanguisque induruit oris, in rigidum parvo silicem discrimine versae.

"Quas quia Pygmalion aevum per crimen agentis viderat, offensus vitiis, quae plurima menti femineae natura dedit, sine coniuge caelebs vivebat thalamique diu consorte carebat.

¹ The text is corrupt. Of the many MS. readings and conjectures this of N. Madvig seems best. Ehwald reads † in lugubris celeri †.
"But if you should chance to ask Amathus, rich in veins of ore, if she is proud of her Propoetides, she would repudiate both them and those whose foreheads once were deformed by two horns, whence also they took their name, Cerastae. Before their gates there used to stand an altar sacred to Jove, the god of hospitality; if any stranger, ignorant of the crime, had seen this altar all smeared with blood, he would suppose that suckling calves or two-year-old sheep of Amathus had been sacrificed thereon. 'Twas the blood of slaughtered guests! Outraged by these impious sacrifices, fostering Venus was preparing to desert her cities and her Ophiusian plains; 'but,' she said, 'wherein have these pleasant regions, wherein have my cities sinned? What crime is there in them? Rather let this impious race pay the penalty by exile or by death, or by some punishment midway betwixt death and exile. And what other can that be than the penalty of a changed form?' While she hesitates to what she shall change them, her eyes fall upon their horns, and she reminds herself that these can still be left to them. And so she changes their big bodies into savage bulls.

"But the foul Propoetides dared to deny the divinity of Venus. In consequence of this, through the wrath of the goddess they are said to have been the first to prostitute their bodies and their fame; and as their shame vanished and the blood of their faces hardened, they were turned with but small change to hard stones.

"Pygmalion had seen these women spending their lives in shame, and, disgusted with the faults which in such full measure nature had given the female

1 i.e. they lost the power to blush.
OVID

interea niveum mira feliciter arte sculpsit ebur formamque dedit, qua femina nasci nulla potest, operisque sui concepit amorem.
virginis est verae facies, quam vivere credas, et, si non obstet reverentia, velle moveri:
ars adeo latet arte sua. miratur et haurit pectore Pygmalion simulati corporis ignes. saepe manus operi temptantes admovet, an sit corpus an illud ebur, nec adhuc ebur esse fatetur.
oscula dat reddique putat loquiturque tenetque et credit tactis digitos insidere membris et metuit, pressos veniat ne livor in artus, et modo blanditias adhibet, modo grata puellis munera fert illi conchas teretesque lapillos et parvas volucres et flores mille colorum liliaque pictasque pilas et ab arbore lapsas Heliodum lacrimas; ornat quoque vestibus artus, dat digitis gemmas, dat longa monilia collo, aure leves baceae, redimicula pectore pendent:
cuncta decent; nec nuda minus formosa videtur.
conlocat hanc stratis concha Sidonide tinctis dapellatque tori sociam adclinataque colla mollibus in plumis, tamquam sensura, reponit.

“Festa dies Veneris tota celeberrima Cypro venerat, et pandis inductae cornibus aurum conciderant ictae nivea cervice iuvenae, turaque fumabant, cum munere functus ad aras mind, he lived unmarried and long was without a partner of his couch. Meanwhile, with wondrous art he successfully carves a figure out of snowy ivory, giving it a beauty more perfect than that of any woman ever born. And with his own work he falls in love. The face is that of a real maiden, whom you would think living and desirous of being moved, if modesty did not prevent. So does his art conceal his art. Pygmalion looks in admiration and is inflamed with love for this semblance of a form. Often he lifts his hands to the work to try whether it be flesh or ivory; nor does he yet confess it to be ivory. He kisses it and thinks his kisses are returned. He speaks to it, grasps it and seems to feel his fingers sink into the limbs when he touches them; and then he fears lest he leave marks of bruises on them. Now he addresscs it with fond words of love, now brings it gifts pleasing to girls, shells and smooth pebbles, little birds and many-hued flowers, and lilies and coloured balls, with tears of the Heliades that drop down from the trees. He drapes its limbs also with robes, puts gemmed rings upon its fingers and a long necklace around its neck; pearls hang from the ears and chains adorn the breast. All these are beautiful; but no less beautiful is the statue undecorated. He lays it on a bed spread with coverlets of Tyrian hue, calls it the consort of his couch, and rests its reclining head upon soft, downy pillows, as if it could enjoy them.

"And now the festal day of Venus had come, which all Cyprus thronged to celebrate; heifers with spreading horns covered with gold had fallen 'neath the death-stroke on their snowy necks, and the altars smoked with incense. Pygmalion, having constitit et timide 'si di dare cuncta potestis, sit coniunx, opto,' non ausus 'eburnea virgo' dicere, Pygmalion 'similis mea' dixit 'eburnae.' sensit, ut ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis, vota quid illa velint et, amici numinis omen, flamma ter accensa est apicemque per aera duxit. ut reidiit, simulacra suae petit ille puellae incumbensque toro dedit oscula: visa tepere est; adnovet os iterum, manibus quoque pectora temptat: temptatum mollescit ebur positoque rigore subsidit digitis ceditque, ut Hymettia sole cera remollescit tractataque pollice multas flectitur in facies ipsoque fit utilis usu. dum stupet et dubie gaudet fallique veretur, rursus amans rursusque manu sua vota retractat. corpus erat! saliunt temptatae pollice venae. tum vero Paphius plenissima concipit heros verba, quibus Veneri grates agat, oraque tandem ore suo non falsa premit, dataque oscula virgo sensit et erubuit timidumque ad lumina lumen attollens pariter cum caelo vidit amantem. coniugio, quod fecit, adest dea, iamque coactis cornibus in plenum noviens lunaribus orbem illa Paphon genuit, de qua tenet insula nomen. "Editus hac ille est, qui si sine prole fuisset, inter felices Cinyras potuisse haberi. dira canam; procul hinc natae, procul est parentes, aut, mea si vestras mulcebunt carmina mentes, desit in hac mihi parte fides, nec credite factum, brought his gift to the altar, stood and falteringly prayed: ‘If ye, O gods, can give all things, I pray to have as wife——’ he did not dare add ‘my ivory maid,’ but said, ‘one like my ivory maid.’ But golden Venus (for she herself was present at her feast) knew what that prayer meant; and, as an omen of her favouring deity, thrice did the flame burn brightly and leap high in air. When he returned he sought the image of his maid, and bending over the couch he kissed her. She seemed warm to his touch. Again he kissed her, and with his hands also he touched her breast. The ivory grew soft to his touch and, its hardness vanishing, gave and yielded beneath his fingers, as Hymettian wax grows soft under the sun and, moulded by the thumb, is easily shaped to many forms and becomes usable through use itself. The lover stands amazed, rejoices still in doubt, fears he is mistaken, and tries his hopes again and yet again with his hand. Yes, it was real flesh! The veins were pulsing beneathhis testing finger. Then did the Paphian hero pour out copious thanks to Venus, and again pressed with his lips real lips at last. The maiden felt the kisses, blushed and, lifting her timid eyes up to the light, she saw the sky and her lover at the same time. The goddess graced with her presence the marriage she had made; and ere the ninth moon had brought her crescent to the full, a daughter was born to them, Paphos, from whom the island takes its name.

1 i.e. amber.

“Cinyras was her son and, had he been without offspring, might have been counted fortunate. A horrible tale I have to tell. Far hence be daughters, far hence, fathers; or, if your minds find pleasure in my songs, do not give credence to this story, and believe that it never happened; or, if you do believe vel, si credetis, facti quoque credite poenam.
si tamen admissum sinit hoc natura videri, gentibus Ismariis et nostro gratulor orbi, gratulor huic terrae, quod abest regionibus illis, quae tantum genuere nefas: sit dives amono cinammaque costumque suum sudataque ligno tura ferat floresque alios Panchaia tellus, dum ferat et murram: tanti nova non fuit arbor.
ipse negat nocuisse tibi sua tela Cupido, Myrrha, facesque suas a crimine vindicat isto;
stipite te Stygio tumidisque adflavit echidnis
e tribus una soror: scelus est odisse parentem, hic amor est odio maius scelus.—undique lecti te cupiunt proceres, totoque Oriente iuventa ad thalami certamen adest: ex omnibus unum elige, Myrrha, virum, dum ne sit in omnibus unus.
illa quidem sentit foedoque repugnat amori et secum ‘quo mente feror? quid molior?’ inquit ‘di, precor, et pietas sacrataque iura parentum,' hoc prohibete nefas scelerique resistite nostro, si tamen hoc scelus est. sed enim damnare negatur hanc Venerem pietas: coeunt animalia nullo cetera dilectu, nec habetur turpe iuvencae ferre patrem tergo, fit equo sua filia coniunx, quasque creavit initi pecudes caper, ipsaque, cuius semine concepta est, ex illo concepit ales.
felices, quibus ista licent! humana malignas cura dedit leges, et quod natura remittit, invida iura negant. gentes tamen esse feruntur, it, believe also in the punishment of the deed. If, however, nature allows a crime like this to show itself, I congratulate the Ismarian people, and this our country; I congratulate this land on being far away from those regions where such iniquity is possible. Let the land of Panchaia be rich in balsam, let it bear its cinnamon, its costum, its frankincense exuding from the trees, its flowers of many sorts, so long as it bears its myrrh-tree, too: a new tree was not worth so great a price. Cupid himself avers that his weapons did not harm you, Myrrha, and clears his torches from that crime of yours. One of the three sisters with firebrand from the Styx and with swollen vipers blasted you. 'Tis a crime to hate one's father, but such love as this is a greater crime than hate. From every side the pick of princes desire you; from the whole Orient young men are here vying for your couch; out of them all choose one for your husband, Myrrha, only let not one be among them all. She, indeed, is fully aware of her vile passion and fights against it and says within herself: 'To what is my purpose tending? What am I planning? O gods, I pray you, and piety and the sacred rights of parents, keep this sin from me and fight off my crime, if indeed it is a crime. But I am not sure, for piety refuses to condemn such love as this. Other animals mate as they will, nor is it thought base for a heifer to endure her sire, nor for his own offspring to be a horse's mate; the goat goes in among the flocks which he has fathered, and the very birds conceive from those from whom they were conceived. Happy they who have such privilege! Human civilization has made spiteful laws, and what nature allows, the jealous laws forbid. And 1 i.e. her father.

in quibus et nato genetrix et nata parenti iungitur, ut pietas geminato crescat amore.
me miseram, quod non nasci mihi contigit illic, fortunaque loci laedor!—quid in ista revolvor? 335 spes interdictae, discedite! dignus amari ille, sed ut pater, est.—ergo, si filia magni non essem Cinyrae, Cinyrae concumbere possem:
nunc, quia iam meus est, non est meus, ipsaque damno est mihi proximitas, aliena potentior essem? 340 ire libet procul hinc patriaeque relinquere fines, dum scelus effugiam; retinet malus ar dor amantem, ut prae sens spectem Cinyram tangamque loquarque osculaque admoveam, si nil conceditur ultra.
ultra autem spectare aliquid potes, inpia virgo? 345 et quot confundas et iura et nomina, sentis!
tune eris et matris paelex et adultera patris?
tunc soror nati genetrixque vocabere fratris?
nec metues atro crinitas angue sorores, quas facibus saevis oculos atque ora petentes 350 noxia corda vident? at tu, dum corpore non es passa nefas, animo ne concipe neve potentis concubitu vetito naturae pollue foedus!
velle puta: res ipsa vetat; pius ille mem orque moris—et o vellem similis furor esset in illo!’ 355 “Dixerat, at Cinyras, quem copia digna procorum, quid faciat, dubitare facit, scitatur ab ip sa, nominibus dictis, cuius velit esse mariti;
illa silet primo patriisque in vultibus haerens aestu at et tepido suffundit lumina rore. 360 yet they say that there are tribes among whom mother with son, daughter with father mates, so that natural love is increased by the double bond. Oh, wretched me, that it was not my lot to be born there, and that I am thwarted by the mere accident of place! Why do I dwell on such things? Avaunt, lawless desires! Worthy to be loved is he, but as a father.—Well, if I were not the daughter of great Cinyras, to Cinyras could I be joined. But as it is, because he is mine, he is not mine; and, while my very propinquity is my loss, would I as a stranger be better off? It is well to go far away, to leave the borders of my native land, if only I may flee from crime; but unhappy passion keeps the lover here, that I may see Cinyras face to face, may touch him, speak with him and kiss him, if nothing else is granted. But can you hope for aught else, you unnatural girl? Think how many ties, how many names you are confusing! Will you be the rival of your mother, the mistress of your father? Will you be called the sister of your son, the mother of your brother? And have you no fear of the sisters with black snakes in their hair, whom guilty souls see brandishing cruel torches before their eyes and faces? But you, while you have not yet sinned in body, do not conceive sin in your heart, and defile not great nature's law with unlawful union. Grant that you wish it: facts themselves forbid. He is a righteous man and heedful of moral law—and oh, how I wish a like passion were in him!

"She spoke; but Cinyras, whom a throng of worthy suitors caused to doubt what he should do, inquired of her herself, naming them over, whom she wished for husband. She is silent at first and, with gaze fixed on her father's face, wavers in doubt, while the virginei Cinyras haec credens esse timoris, flere vetat siccatque genas atque oscula iungit; Myrrha datis nimium gaudet consultaque, qualem optet habere virum, 'similem tibi' dixit; at ille non intellectam vocem conlaudat et ' esto tam pia semper' ait. pietatis nomine dicto demisit vultus sceleris sibi conscia virgo.
OVID

"Noctis erat medium, curasque et corpora somnus solverat; at virgo Cinyreia pervigil igni carpiturn indomito furiosaque vota retractat et modo desperat, modo vult temptare, pudetque et cupid, et, quid agat, non invenit, utque securi saecia trabs ingens, ubi plaga novissima restat, quo cadat, in dubio est omnique a parte timetur, sic animus vario labefactus vulnere nutat huc levis atque illuc momentaque sumit utroque, nec modus et requies, nisi mors, reperitur amoris. mors placet. erigitur laqueaque innectere fauces destinat et zona summo de poste revincta 'care, vale, Cinyra, causamque intellege mortis!' dixit et aptabat pallenti vincula collo.

"Murmura verborum fidas nutricis ad aures pervenisse ferunt limen servantis alumnæ. surgit anus reseratque fores mortisque paratae instrumenta videns spatio conclamat eodem seque ferit scinditque sinus ereptaque collo vincula dilaniat; tum denique flere vacavit, tum dare complexus laqueaque requirere causam. muta silet virgo terramque inmota tuetur"
warm tears fill her eyes. Cinyras, attributing this to maidenly alarm, bids her not to weep, dries her cheeks and kisses her on the lips. Myrrha is too rejoiced at this and, being asked what kind of husband she desires, says: 'One like you.' But he approves her word, not understanding it, and says: 'May you always be so filial.' At the word 'filial' the girl, conscious of her guilt, casts down her eyes.

'It was midnight, and sleep had set free men's bodies from their cares; but the daughter of Cinyras, sleepless through the night, is consumed by ungoverned passion, renews her mad prayers, is filled now with despair, now with lust to try, feels now shame and now desire, and finds no plan of action; and, just as a great tree, smitten by the axe, when all but the last blow has been struck, wavers which way to fall and threatens every side, so her mind, weakened by many blows, leans unsteadily now this way and now that, and falteringly turns in both directions; and no end nor rest for her passion can she find save death. She decides on death. She rises from her couch, resolved to hang herself, and, tying her girdle to a ceiling-beam, she says: 'Farewell, dear Cinyras, and know why I die,' and is in the act of fitting the rope about her death-pale neck.

'They say that the confused sound of her words came to the ears of the faithful nurse who watched outside her darling's door. The old woman rises and opens the door; and when she sees the preparations for death, all in the same moment she screams, beats her breasts and rends her garments, and seizes and snatches off the rope from the girl's neck. Then at last she has time to weep, time to embrace her and ask the reason for the noose. The girl is stubbornly silent, gazes fixedly on the ground, et deprensa dolet tardae conamina mortis. 390 instat anus canosque suos et inania nudans ubera per cunas alimentaque prima precatur, ut sibi committat, quicquid dolet. illa rogantem aversata gemit; certa est exquirere nutrix nec solam spondere fidem. 'die' inquit 'opemque me sine ferre tibi : non est mea pigra senectus. 396 seu furor est, habeo, quae carmine sanet et herbis;
sive aliquis nocuit, magico lustraberc ritu;
ira deum sive est, sacris placabilis ira.
quid rear ulterius? certe fortuna domusque sospes et in cursu est : vivunt genetrixque paterque.' Myrrha patre audito suspuria duxit ab imo pectore ; nec nutrix etiamnum concipit ullam mente nefas aliquemque tamen praesentit amorem propositique tenax, quodcumque est, orat, ut ipsi indicet, et gremio lacrimantem tollit anili atque ita conplectens insirmis membra lacertis 'sensimus,' inquit 'amas! et in hoc mea (pone timorem)
sedulitas erit apta tibi, nec sentiet umquam hoc pater.' exiluit gremio furibunda torumque ore premens 'discede, precor, miseroque pudori parce! ' ait; instanti 'discede, aut desine' dixit 'quaerere, quid doleam ! scelus est, quod scire laboras.' horret anus tremulasque manus annisque metuque tendit et ante pedes supplex procumbit alumnae et modo blanditur, modo, si non conscia fiat, terret et indicium laquei coeptaeque minatur 92
and grieves that her attempt at death, all too slow, has been detected. The old woman insists, bares her white hair and thin breasts, and begs by the girl’s cradle and her first nourishment that she trust to her nurse her cause of grief. The girl turns away from her pleadings with a groan. The nurse is determined to find out, and promises more than confidence. ‘Tell me,’ she says, ‘and let me help you; my old age is not without resources. If it be madness, I know one who has healing-charms and herbs; or if someone has worked an evil spell on you, you shall be purified with magic rites; or if the gods are wroth with you, wrath may be appeased by sacrifice. What further can I think? Surely your household fortunes are prosperous as usual; your mother and your father are alive and well.’ At the name of father Myrrha sighed deeply from the bottom of her heart. Even now the nurse had no conception of any evil in the girl’s soul, and yet she had a presentiment that it was some love affair, and with persistent purpose she begged her to tell her whatever it was. She took the weeping girl on her aged bosom, and so holding her in her feeble arms she said: ‘I know, you are in love! and in this affair I shall be entirely devoted to your service, have no fear; nor shall your father ever know.’ With a bound the mad girl leaped from her bosom and, burying her face in her couch, she said: ‘Go away, I pray you, and spare my unhappy shame’: still pressed, ‘Go away,’ she said again, ‘or cease asking why I grieve. It is a crime, what you want so much to know.’ The old woman is horrified and, stretching out her hands trembling with age and fear, she falls pleadingly at her nursling’s feet, now coaxing and now frightening her if she does not tell; she both threatens to report the affair of the noose and attempt at death, and promises her help mortis et officium commisso spondet amori.
extulit illa caput lacrimisque inplevit obortis pectora nutricis conataque saepe fateri saepe tenet vocem pudibundaque vestibus ora texit et 'o' dixit 'felicem coniuge matrem!' hactenus, et gemuit. gelidus nutricis in artus ossaque (sensit enim) penetrat tremor, albaque tota vertice canities rigidis stetit hirta capillis, multaque, ut excuteret diros, si posset, amores, addidit, at virgo scit se non falsa moneri;
certa mori tamen est, si non potiatur amore.
'vive,' ait haec, 'potiere tuo'—et, non ausa 'parente' dicere, conticuit promissaque numine firmat.

"Festa piae Cereris celebrabant annua matres illa, quibus nivea velatae corpora veste primitias frugum dant spicae serta suarum perque novem noctes venerem tactusque viriles in vetitis numerant: turba Cenchreis in illa regis adest coniunx arcanaque sacra frequentat.
ergo legitima vacuus dum coniuge lectus, nacta gravem vino Cinyram male sedula nutrix, nomine mentito veros exponit amores et faciem laudat; quaesitis virginis annis
'par' ait 'est Myrrhae.' quam postquam adducere iussa est

utque domum rediit, 'gaude, mea' dixit 'alumna:
vicimus!' infelix non toto pectore sentit laetitiam virgo, praesagaque pectora maerent, sed tamen et gaudet: tanta est discordia mentis.

"Tempus erat, quo cuncta silent, interque triones flexerat obliquo plaustrum temone Bootes:"
if she will confess her love. The girl lifts her head and fills her nurse's bosom with her rising tears; often she tries to confess, and often checks her words and hides her shamed face in her robes. Then she says: 'O mother, blest in your husband!'—only so much, and groans. Cold horror stole through the nurse's frame (for she understood), and her white hair stood up stiffly over all her head, and she said many things to banish, if she might, the mad passion. The girl knew that she was truly warned; still she was resolved on death if she could not have her desire. 'Live then,' said the other, 'have your'—she did not dare say 'father'; she said no more, calling on Heaven to confirm her promises.

"It was the time when married women were celebrating that annual festival of Ceres at which with bodies robed in white raiment they bring garlands of wheaten ears as the first offerings of their fruits, and for nine nights they count love and the touch of man among things forbidden. In that throng was Cenchreis, wife of the king, in constant attendance on the secret rites. And so since the king's bed was deprived of his lawful wife, the over-officious nurse, finding Cinyras drunk with wine, told him of one who loved him truly, giving a false name, and praised her beauty. When he asked the maiden's age, she said: 'The same as Myrrha's.' Bidden to fetch her, when she had reached home she cried: 'Rejoice, my child, we win!' Not with all her heart did the unhappy girl feel joy, and her mind was filled with sad forebodings; but still she did also rejoice; so inconsistent were her feelings.

"It was the time when all things are at rest, and between the Bears Boötes had turned his wain with ad facinus venit illa suum; fugit aurea caelo luna, tegunt nigrae latitantia sidera nubes;
nox caret igne suo; primus tegis, Icare, vultus, 450 Erigoneque pio sacrata parentis amore.
ter pedis offensi signo est revocata, ter omen funereus bubo letali carmine fecit:
it tamen, et tenebrae minuunt noxque atra pudorem;
nutriciscque manum laeva tenet, altera motu 455 caeicum iter explorat. thalami iam limina tangit, iamque fores aperit, iam ducitur intus: at illi poplite succiduo genua intremuere, fugitque et color et sanguis, animusque relinquit euntem.
quoque suo propior sceleri est, magis horret, et ausi paenitet, et vellet non cognita posse reverti. 461 cunctantem longaeva manu deducit et alto admotam lecto cum traderet 'accipe,' dixit,
'ista tua est, Cinyra' devotaque corpora iunxit.
accipit obsceno genitor sua viscera lecto 465 virgineosque metus levat hortaturque timentem.
forsitan aetatis quoque nomine 'filia' dixit, dixit et illa 'pater,' sceleri ne nomina desint.
"Plena patris thalamis excedit et inpia diro semina fert utero conceptaque crimina portat. 470 postera nox facinus geminat, nec finis in illa est, cum tandem Cinyras, avidus cognoscere amantem 96"
down-pointing pole. She came to her guilty deed. The golden moon fled from the sky; black clouds hid the skulking stars; night was without her usual fires. You were the first, Icarus, to cover your face, and you, Erigone, deified for your pious love of your father. Thrice was Myrrha stopped by the omen of the stumbling foot; thrice did the funereal screech-owl warn her by his uncanny cry: still on she went, her shame lessened by the black shadows of the night. With her left hand she holds fast to her nurse, and with the other she gropes her way through the dark. Now she reaches the threshold of the chamber, now she opens the door, now is led within. But her knees tremble and sink beneath her; colour and blood fleck from her face, and her senses desert her as she goes. The nearer she is to her crime, the more she shudders at it, repents her of her boldness, would gladly turn back unrecognized. As she holds back, the aged crone leads her by the hand to the side of the high bed and, delivering her over, says: 'Take her, Cinyras, she is yours'; and leaves the doomed pair together. The father receives his own flesh in his incestuous bed, strives to calm her girlish fears, and speaks encouragingly to the shrinking girl. It chanced, by a name appropriate to her age, he called her 'daughter,' and she called him 'father,' that names might not be lacking to their guilt.

"Forth from the chamber she went, full of her father, with crime conceived within her womb. The next night repeated their guilt, nor was that the end. At length Cinyras, eager to recognize his mistress

1 At midnight these constellations attain their highest point in the heavens, and thereafter begin their downward course.
post tot concubitus, inlato lumine vidit et scelus et natam verbisque dolore retentis pendenti nitidum vagina deripit ensem; Myrrha fugit: tenebrisque et caeca munere noctis intercepta neci est latosque vagata per agros palmiferos Arabas Panchaæaque rura relinquit perque novem erravit redeuntis cornua lunæ, cum tandem terra requievit fessa Sabaea;
vixque uteri portabat onus. tum nescia voti atque inter mortisque metus et taedia vitae est tales complexa precæ: 'o siqua patetis numina confessis, merui nec triste recuso supplicium, sed ne violem vivosque superstes mortuaque extinctos, ambobus pellite regnis mutataeque mihi vitamque necemque negate!' numen confessis aliquod patet: ultima certe vota suos habuere deos. nam crura loquentis terra supervenit, ruptosque obliqua per ungues porrigitur radix, longi firmamina trunci, ossaque robur agunt, mediaque manente medulla sanguis it in sucos, in magnos bracchia ramos, in parvos digiti, duratur cortice pellis.
iamque gravem crescens uterum perstrinxerat arbor pectoraque obruerat collumque operire parabat:
non tulit illa moram venientique obvia ligno subsedit mersitque suos in cortice vultus.
quae quamquam amisit veteres cum corpore sensus, flet tamen, et tepidae manant ex arbore guttae.
est honor et lacrimis, stillataque robore murra nomen erile tenet nulloque tacebitur aevo.
after so many meetings, brought in a light and beheld his crime and his daughter. Speechless with woe, he snatched his bright sword from the sheath which hung near by. Myrrha fled and escaped death by grace of the shades of the dark night. Groping her way through the broad fields, she left palm-bearing Arabia and the Panchaean country; then, after nine months of wandering, in utter weariness she rested at last in the Sabaean land. And now she could scarce bear the burden of her womb. Not knowing what to pray for, and in a strait betwixt fear of death and weariness of life, she summed up her wishes in this prayer: 'O gods, if any there be who will listen to my prayer, I do not refuse the dire punishment I have deserved; but lest, surviving, I offend the living, and, dying, I offend the dead, drive me from both realms; change me and refuse me both life and death!' Some god did listen to her prayer; her last petition had its answering gods. For even as she spoke the earth closed over her legs; roots burst forth from her toes and stretched out on either side the supports of the high trunk; her bones gained strength, and, while the central pith remained the same, her blood changed to sap, her arms to long branches, her fingers to twigs, her skin to hard bark. And now the growing tree had closely bound her heavy womb, had buried her breast and was just covering her neck; but she could not endure the delay and, meeting the rising wood, she sank down and plunged her face in the bark. Though she has lost her old-time feelings with her body, still she weeps, and the warm drops trickle down from the tree. Even the tears have fame, and the myrrh which distils from the tree-trunk keeps the name of its mistress and will be remembered through all the ages.
"At male conceptus sub robore creverat infans quaerebatque viam, qua se genetrice reliqua exsereret; media gravisid tumet arbo re venter. 505 tendit onus matrem; neque habent sua verba dolores, nec Lucina potest parientis voce vocari. nitenti tamen est similis curvataque crebros dat gemitus arbor lacrimisque cadentibus utem. constitit ad ramos mitis Lucina dolentis 510 admovitque manus et verba puerpera dixit: arbor agit rimas et fissa cortice vivum reddit onus, vagitque puer; quem mollibus herbis naides inpositum lacrimis unxere parentis. laudaret faciem Livor quoque; qualia namque 515 corpora nudorum tabula pinguntur Amorum, talis erat, sed, ne faciat discrimina cultus, aut huic adde leves, aut illi deme pharetras.

"Labitur occulte fallitque volatilis aetas, et nihil est annis velocius: ille sorore 520 natus avoque suo, qui conditus arbo re nuper, nuper erat genitus, modo formosissimus infans, iam iuvenis, iam vir, iam se formosior ipso est, iam placet et Veneri matrisque ulciscitur ignes, namque pharetratus dum dat puer oscula matri, 525 inscius exstanti destrinxit harundine pectus; laesa manu natum dea repulit: altius actum vulnus erat specie primoque fefellerat ipsam. capta viri forma non iam Cythereia curat litora, non alto repetit Paphon aequore cinctam 530 piscosamque Cnidon gravidamve Amathunta metallis; 100
"But the misbegotten child had grown within the wood, and was now seeking a way by which it might leave its mother and come forth. The pregnant tree swells in mid-trunk, the weight within straining on its mother. The birth-pangs cannot voice themselves, nor can Lucina be called upon in the words of one in travail. Still, like a woman in agony, the tree bends itself, groans oft, and is wet with falling tears. Pitying Lucina stood near the groaning branches, laid her hands on them, and uttered charms to aid the birth. Then the tree cracked open, the bark was rent asunder, and it gave forth its living burden, a wailing baby-boy. The naiads laid him on soft leaves and anointed him with his mother's tears. Even Envy would praise his beauty, for he looked like one of the naked loves portrayed on canvas. But, that dress may make no distinction, you should either give the one a light quiver or take it from the other.

"Time glides by imperceptibly and cheats us in its flight, and nothing is swifter than the years. That son of his sister and his grandfather, who was but lately concealed within his parent tree, but lately born, then a most lovely baby-boy, is now a youth, now man, now more beautiful than his former self; now he excites even Venus' love, and avenges his mother's passion. For while the goddess' son, with quiver on shoulder, was kissing his mother, he chanced unwittingly to graze her breast with a projecting arrow. The wounded goddess pushed her son away with her hand; but the scratch had gone deeper than she thought, and she herself was at first deceived. Now, smitten with the beauty of a mortal, she cares no more for the borders of Cythera, nor does she seek Paphos, girt by the deep sea, nor fish-haunted Cnidos, abstinet et caelo: caelo praefertur Adonis. huc tenet, huic comes est adsuetaque semper in umbra
OVID

indulgere sibi formamque augere colendo, per iuga, per silvas dumosaque saxa vagatur fine genu vestem ritu succincta Dianae hortaturque canes tutaeque animalia praedae, aut pronos lepores aut celsum in cornua cervum aut agitat dammas; a fortibus abstinet apris raptoreisque lupos armatosque unguibus ursos vitat et armenti saturatos caede leones.
te quoque, ut hos timeas, siquid prodesse monendo possit, Adoni, monct, 'fortis'que 'fugacibus esto' inquit; 'in audaces non est audacia tuta.'
parce meo, iuvenis, temerarius esse periclo, neve feras, quibus arma dedit natura, lacesse, stet mihi ne magno tua gloria. non movet actas nec facies nec quae Venerem movere, leones saetigeresque sues oculosque animosque ferarum.
fulmen habent acres in aduncis dentibus apri, impetus est fulvis et vasta leonibus ira, invisumque mihi genus est. quae causa, roganti
'dicam,' ait 'et veteris monstrum mirabere culpae.
se labor insolitus iam me lassavit, et, ecce, opportuna sua blanditut populus umbra, datque torum caespes: libet hac requiescere tecum' (et requievit) 'humo' pressitque et gramen et ipsum inque sinu iuvenis posita cervice reclinis sic ait ac mediis interserit oscula verbis:
nor Amathus, rich in precious ores. She stays away even from the skies; Adonis is preferred to heaven. She holds him fast, is his companion and, though her wont has always been to take her ease in the shade, and to enhance her beauty by fostering it, now, over mountain ridges, through the woods, over rocky places set with thorns, she ranges with her garments girt up to her knees after the manner of Diana. She also cheers on the hounds and pursues those creatures which are safe to hunt, such as the headlong hares, or the stag with high-branching horns, or the timid doe; but from strong wild boars she keeps away, and from ravenous wolves, and she avoids bears, armed with claws, and lions reeking with the slaughter of cattle. She warns you, too, Adonis, to fear these beasts, if only it were of any avail to warn. 'Be brave against timorous creatures,' she says; 'but against bold creatures boldness is not safe. Do not be rash, dear boy, at my risk; and do not provoke those beasts which nature has well armed, lest your glory be at great cost to me. Neither youth nor beauty, nor the things which have moved Venus, move lions and bristling boars and the eyes and minds of wild beasts. Boars have the force of a lightning stroke in their curving tusks, and the impetuous wrath of tawny lions is irresistible. I fear and hate them all.' When he asks her why, she says: 'I will tell, and you shall marvel at the monstrous outcome of an ancient crime. But now I am aweary with my unaccustomed toil; and see, a poplar, happily at hand, invites us with its shade, and here is grassy turf for couch. I would fain rest here on the grass with you.' So saying, she reclined upon the ground and, pillowing her head against his breast and mingling kisses with her words she told the following tale:
"Forsitan audieris aliquam certamine cursus veloces superasse viros: non fabula rumor ille fuit; superabat enim. nec dicere posses, laude pedum formaene bono praestantior esset. scitanti deus huic de coniuge "coniuge" dixit "nil opus est, Atalanta, tibi: fuge coniugis usum. 565 nec tamen effugies teque ipsa viva carebis." territa sorte dei per opacas innuba silvas vivit et instantem turbam violenta procorum condicione fugat, "nec sum potienda, nisi" inquit "victa prius cursu. pedibus contendite mecum: praemia veloci coniunx thalamique dabuntur, mors pretium tardis: ea lex certaminis esto." illa quidem inmitis, sed (tanta potentia formae est) venit ad hanc legem temeraria turba procorum. sederat Hippomenes cursus spectator iniqui et "petitur cuiquam per tanta pericula coniunx?" dixerat ac nimios iuvenum damnarat amores; ut faciem et posito corpus velamine vidit, quale meum, vel quale tuum, si femina fias, obstipuit tollensque manus "ignoscite," dixit "quos modo culpavi! nondum mihi praemia nota, quae peteretis, erant." laudando concipit ignes et, ne quis iuvenum currat velocius, optat invidiaque timet. "sed cur certaminis huius intemptata mihi fortuna relinquitur?" inquit "audentes deus ipse iuvat!" dum talia secum exigit Hippomenes, passu volat alite virgo.
"You may, perchance, have heard of a maid who surpassed swift-footed men in the contest of the race. And that was no idle tale, for she did surpass them. Nor could you say whether her fleetness or her beauty was more worthy of your praise. Now when this maid consulted the oracle about a husband, the god replied: "A husband will be your bane, O Atalanta; flee from the intercourse of husband; and yet you will not escape, and, though living, you will lose yourself." Terrified by the oracle of the god, she lived unwedded in the shady woods, and with harsh terms she repulsed the insistent throng of suitors. "I am not to be won," she said, "till I be conquered first in speed. Contest the race with me. Wife and couch shall be given as prize unto the swift, but death shall be the reward of those who lag behind. Be that the condition of the race." She, in truth, was pitiless, but such was the witchery of her beauty, even on this condition a rash throng of suitors came to try their fate. Now Hippomenes had taken his seat as a spectator of this cruel race, and had exclaimed: "Who would seek a wife at so great peril to himself?" and he had condemned the young men for their headstrong love. But when he saw her face and her disrobed form, such beauty as is mine, or as would be yours if you were a woman, he was amazed and, stretching out his hands, he cried: "Forgive me, ye whom but now I blamed. I did not yet realize the worth of the prize you strove for." As he praises, his own heart takes fire and he hopes that none of the youths may outstrip her in the race, and is filled with jealous fears. "But why is my fortune in this contest left untried?" he cries. "God himself helps those who dare." While thus Hippomenes was weighing the matter in his mind, the girl sped by
OVID

quae quamquam Scythica non setius ire sagitta Aonio visa est iuveni, tamen ille decorem miratur magis: et cursus facit ille decorem. 590.
aura refert ablata citis talaria plantis, tergaque iactantur crines per eburnea, quaeque poplitibus suberant picto genualia limbo; inque puellari corpus candore ruborem traxerat, haud aliter, quam cum super atria velum candida purpureum simulatas inscit umbras. 596 dum notat haec hospes, decursa novissima meta est, et tegitur festa victrix Atalanta corona.
dant gemitum victi penduntque ex foedere poenas.

"'Non tamen eventu iuvenis deterritus horum constitit in medio vultuque in virgine fixo 601
'quid facilem titulum superando quaeis inertes?
mecon confer’ ait. ‘seu me fortuna potentem fecerit, a tanto non indignabere vincí: namque mihi genitor Megareus Onchestius, illi est Neptunus avus, pronepos ego regis aquarum, nec virtus citra genus est; seu vincar, habebis Hippomene victo magnum et memorabile nomen.'
talia dicientem molli Schoeneia vultu aspicit et dubitat, superari an vincere malit, 610 atque ita ‘quis deus hunc formosis’ inquit ‘iniquus perdere vult caraeque iubet discrimine vitae coniugium petere hoc? non sum, me iudice, tanti.
nec forma tangor, (poteram tamen hac quoque tangi) sed quod adhuc puer est; non me movet ipse, sed aetas. 615
on winged feet. Though she seemed to the Aonian youth to go not less swiftly than a Seythian arrow, yet he admired her beauty still more. And the running gave a beauty of its own. The breeze bore back the streaming pinions on her flying feet, her hair was tossed over her white shoulders; the bright-bordered ribbons at her knees were fluttering, and over her fair girlish body a pink flush came, just as when a purple awning, drawn over a marble hall, stains it with borrowed hues. While the stranger marked all this, the last goal was passed, and Atalanta was crowned victor with a festal wreath. But the conquered youths with groans paid the penalty according to the bond.

"Not deterred by the experience of these, however, Hippomenes stood forth and, fixing his eyes upon the girl, exclaimed: "Why do you seek an easily won renown by conquering sluggish youth? Come, strive with me! If fortune shall give me the victory, 'twill be no shame for you to be overcome by so great a foe. For Megareus of Onchestus is my father and his grandfather is Neptune; hence I am the great-grandson of the king of the waters. Nor is my manly worth less than my race. Or, if I shall be defeated, you will have a great and memorable name for the conquest of Hippomenes." As he said this, the daughter of Schoeneus gazed on him with softening eyes, being in a strait betwixt her desire to conquer and to be conquered. And thus she spoke: "What god, envious of beauteous youths, wishes to destroy this one, and prompts him to seek wedlock with me at the risk of his own dear life? I am not worth so great a price, if I am the judge. Nor is it his beauty that touches me—and yet I could be touched by this as well—but the fact that he is still quid, quod inest virtus et mens interrita leti?
quid, quod ab aequorea numeratur origine quartus?
quid, quod amat tantique putat conubia nostra.

ut pereat, si me fors illi dura negarit?
dum licet, hospes, abi thalamosque relinque cruentos coniugium crudele meum est, tibi nubere nulla 621 nolet, et optari potes a sapiente puella.— cur tanen est mihi cura tui tot iam ante peremptis?
viderit! intereat, quoniam tot caede procorum admonitus non est agiturque in taedia vitae.— 625 occidet hic igitur, voluit quia vivere mecum, indignamque necem pretium patietur amoris?
non erit invidiae victoria nostra ferendae.
sed non culpa mea est! utinam desistere velles, aut, quoniam es demens, utinam velocior esses! 630
a! quam virgineus puerili vultus in ore est!
a! miser Hippomene, nollem tibi visa fuissem!
vivere dignus eras. quodsi felicior essem, nec mihi coniugium fata inportuna negarent, unus eras, cum quo sociare cubilia vellem.” 635 dixerat, utque rudis primoque cupidine tacta, quid facit ignorans, amat et non sentit amorem.

“‘iam solitos poscunt cursus populusque paterque, cum me sollicita proles Neptunia voce invocat Hippomenes “Cytherea,” que “conprecor, ausis adsit” ait “nostris et quos dedit, adiuvet ignes.”

108
but a boy. It is not he himself who moves me, but his youth. What of his manly courage and his soul fearless of death? What that he claims by birth to be the fourth from the monarch of the seas? What of his love for me, and that he counts marriage with me of so great worth that he would perish if cruel fate denies me to him? O stranger, go hence while still you may; flee from this bloody wedlock. Marriage with me is a fatal thing. No other maiden will refuse to wed you, and it may well be that a wiser girl will seek your love.—Yet why this care for you, since so many have already perished? Let him look to himself! let him perish, too, since by the death of so many suitors he was not warned, and cares so little for his life.—And shall he die, because he wished to live with me, and suffer undeserved death as the penalty of love? My victory will be attended by unbearable hatred against me. But the fault is none of mine. O sir, I would that you might desist, or, since you are so madly set upon it, would that you might prove the swifter! Ah, how girlish is his youthful face! Ah, poor Hippomenes, I would that you had never looked on me! You were so worthy of life. But if I were of happier fortune, and if the harsh fates did not deny me marriage, you were the only he with whom I should want to share my couch.” So speaks the maid; and, all untutored, feeling for the first time the impulse of love, ignorant of what she does, she loves and knows it not.

“Meanwhile the people and her father demanded the accustomed race. Then did the Neptunian youth, Hippomenes, with supplicant voice call on me: “O may Cytherea,” he said, “be near, I pray, and assist the thing I dare and smile upon the love which she has given.” A kindly breeze bore this soft prayer to detulit aura preces ad me non invida blandas:
motaque sum, fateor, nec opis mora longa dabatur.
est ager, indigenae Tamasenum nomine dicunt, telluris Cypriae pars optima, quam mihi prisci sacravere senes templisque accedere dotem hanc iussere meis; medio nitet arbor in arvo, fulva comas, fulvo ramis crepitantibus auro:
hinc tria forte mea veniens decerpta ferebam aurea poma manu nullique videnda nisi ipsi Hippomenen adii docuique, quis usus in illis.
signa tubae dederant, cum carcere pronus uterque emicat et summam celeri pede libat harenam:
posse putes illos sicco freta radere passu et segetis canae stantes percurrere aristas.
adiciunt animos iuveni clamorque favorque verbaque dicentum "nunc, nunc incumbere tempus!
Hippomene, propera! nunc viribus utere totis!
pelle moram: vinces!" dubium, Megareius heros gaudeat an virgo magis his Schoeneia dictis.
o quotiens, cum iam posset transire, morata est spectatosque diu vultus invita reliquit! aridus e lasso veniebat anhelitus ore, metaque erat longe: tum denique de tribus unum fetibus arboreis proles Neptunia misit.
obstipuit virgo nitidique cupidine pomi declinat cursus aurumque volubile tollit; praeterit Hippomenes: resonant spectacula plausu.
me and I confess it moved my heart. And there was but scanty time to give him aid. There is a field, the natives call it the field of Tamasus, the richest portion of the Cyprian land, which in ancient times men set apart to me and bade my temples be enriched with this. Within this field there stands a tree gleaming with golden leaves and its branches crackle with the same bright gold. Fresh come from there, I chanced to have in my hand three golden apples which I had plucked. Revealing myself to no one save to him, I approached Hippomenes and taught him how to use the apples. The trumpets had sounded for the race, when they both, crouching low, flashed forth from their stalls and skidded the surface of the sandy course with flying feet. You would think that they could graze the sea with un-wet feet and pass lightly over the ripened heads of the standing grain. The youth was cheered on by shouts of applause and the words of those who cried to him: "Now, now is the time to bend to the work, Hippomenes! Go on! Now use your utmost strength! No tarrying! You're sure to win!" It is a matter of doubt whether the heroic son of Megareus or the daughter of Schoeneus took more joy of these words. Oh, how often, when she could have passed him, did she delay and after gazing long upon his face reluctantly leave him behind! And now dry, panting breath came from his weary throat and the goal was still far away. Then at length did Neptune's scion throw one of the three golden apples. The maid beheld it with wonder and, eager to possess the shining fruit, she turned out of her course and picked up the rolling golden thing. Hippomenes passed her by while the spectators roared their applause. She by a burst of speed made illa moram celeri cessataque tempora cursu corrigit atque iterum iuvenem post terga relinquit:
et rursus pomi iactu remorata secundi consequitur transitque virum. pars ultima cursus restabat; "nunc" inquit "ades, dea munera suos auctor!" inque latus campi, quo tardius illa rediret, iecit ab obliquo nitidum iuvenaliter aurum.
an peteret, virgo visa est dubitare: coegi tollere et adieci sublato pondera malo inpediique oneris pariter gravitate moraque, zeve meus sermo cursu sit tardior ipso, praeterita est virgo: duxit sua praemia victor.

"' Dignane, cui grates ageret, cui turis honorem ferret, Adoni, fui? nec grates inmemor egit, nec mihi tura dedit. subitam convertor in iram, contemptuque dolens, ne sim spernenda futuris, exemplo caveo meque ipsa exhortor in ambos:
templa, deum Matri quae quondam clarus Echion fecerat ex voto, nemorosis abdita silvis, transibant, et iter longum requiescere suasit;
illic concubitus intempestiva cupid occupat Hippomenen a numine concita nostro.
luminis exigui fuerat prope templa recessus, speluncae similis, nativo pumice tectus, religione sacer prisca, quo multa sacerdos up for her delay and the time that she had lost, and again left the youth behind her. Again she delayed at the tossing of the second apple, followed and passed the man. The last part of the course remained. "Now be near me, goddess, author of my gift!" he said, and obliquely into a side of the field, returning whence she would lose much time, with all his youthful strength he threw the shining gold. The girl seemed to hesitate whether or no she should go after it. I forced her to take it up, and added weight to the fruit she carried, and so impeded her equally with the weight of her burden and with her loss of time. And, lest my story be longer than the race itself, the maiden was outstripped; the victor led away his prize.

"And was I not worthy, Adonis, of being thanked and of having the honour of incense paid to me? But, forgetful of my services, he neither thanked nor offered incense to me. Then was I changed to sudden wrath and, smarting under the slight, and resolved not to be slighted in the future, I decided to make an example of them, and urged myself on against them both. They were passing by a temple deep hidden in the woods, which in ancient times illustrious Echion had built to the mother of the gods in payment of a vow; and the long journey persuaded them to rest. There incontinent desire seized on Hippomenes, who was kindled by my divinity. Hard by the temple was a dimly lighted, cave-like place, built of soft native rock, hallowed by ancient religious veneration, where the priest had set many wooden images of the olden gods. This place he entered; this holy presence he defiled by lust. The sacred images turned away their eyes. The tower-

1 Cybele.
OVID

lignea contulerat veterum simulacra deorum; hunc init et vetito temerat sacraria probro. 695 sacra retorserunt oculos, turritaque Mater an Stygia santes dubitavit mergeret unda:
poena levis visa est; ergo modo levia fulvae colla iubae velant, digiti curvatur in ungues, ex umeris armi sint, in pectora totum 700 pondus abit, summae cauda verruntur harenae;
iram vultus habet, pro verbis murmura reddunt, pro thalamis celebrant silvas aliisque timendi dente premunt domito Cybeleia frena leones.
hostru, care mihi, cumque his genus omne ferarum, 705 quod non terga fugae, sed pugnae pectora praebet, effuge, ne virtus tua sit damnosa duobus!

“ILLA quidem monuit iunctisque per aera cygnis carpet iter, sed stat monitis contraria virtus.
forte suem latebris vestigia certa secuti 710 excivere canes, silvisque exire parantem fixerat obliquo iuvenis Cinyreius iictu:
protinus excussit pando venabula rostro sanguine tincta suo trepidumque et tuta petentem trux aper insequitur totosque sub inguine dentes 715 abdidit et fulva moribundum stravit harena.
vecta levi curru medias Cytherea per auras Cypron olorinis nondum pervenerat alis:
agnovit longe gemitum morientis et albas flexit aves illuc, utque aethere visid ab alto 720 exanimem inque suo iactantem sanguine corpus, desiluit pariterque sinum pariterque capillos rupit et indignis percussit pectora palmis
.questaque cum fatis ‘at non tamen omnia vestri 114
crowned. Mother was on the verge of plunging the guilty pair beneath the waves of Styx; but the punishment seemed light. And so tawny manes covered their necks but now smooth, their fingers curved into claws, their arms changed to legs, their weight went chiefly to their chests, with tails they swept the surface of the sandy ground. Harsh were their features, rough growls they gave for speech, and for marriage chamber they haunted the wild woods. And now as lions, to others terrible, with tamed mouths they champed the bits of Cybele. These beasts, and with them all other savage things which turn not their backs in flight, but offer their breasts to battle, do you, for my sake, dear boy, avoid lest your manly courage be the ruin of us both.'

"Thus the goddess warned and through the air, drawn by her swans, she took her way; but the boy's manly courage would not brook advice. It chanced his hounds, following a well-marked trail, roused up a wild boar from his hiding-place; and, as he was rushing from the wood, the young grandson of Cinyras pierced him with a glancing blow. Straightway the fierce boar with his curved snout rooted out the spear wet with his blood, and pursued the youth, now full of fear and running for his life; deep in the groin he sank his long tusks, and stretched the dying boy upon the yellow sand. Borne through the middle air by flying swans on her light car, Cytherea had not yet come to Cyprus, when she heard afar the groans of the dying youth and turned her white swans to go to him. And when from the high air she saw him lying lifeless and writhing in his blood, she leaped down, tore both her garments and her hair and beat her breasts with cruel hands. Reproaching fate, she said: 'But iuris erunt' dixit, 'luctus monimenta manebunt semper, Adoni, mei, repetitaque mortis imago annua plangoris peraget simulamina nostri; at cruor in florem mutabitur. an tibi quondam femineos artus in olentes vertere mentas, Persephone, licuit: nobis Cinyreius heros invidiae mutatus erit? sic fata cruorem nectare odorato sparsit, qui tactus ab illo intumuit sic, ut fulvo perlucida caeno surgere bulla solet, nec plena longior hora facta mora est, cum flos de sanguine concolor ortus, qualem, quae lento celant sub cortice granum, punica ferre solent; brevis est tamen usus in illo; namque male haerentem et nimia levitate caducum excutiunt idem, qui praestant nomina, venti.' all shall not be in your power. My grief, Adonis, shall have an enduring monument, and each passing year in memory of your death shall give an imitation of my grief. But your blood shall be changed to a flower. Or was it once allowed to thee, Persephone, to change a maiden's form to fragrant mint, and shall the change of my hero, offspring of Cinyras, be grudged to me?'' So saying, with sweet-scented nectar she sprinkled the blood; and this, touched by the nectar, swelled as when clear bubbles rise up from yellow mud. With no longer than an hour's delay a flower sprang up of blood-red hue such as pomegranates bear which hide their seeds beneath the tenacious rind. But short-lived is their flower; for the winds from which it takes its name shake off the flower so delicately clinging and doomed too easily to fall.''

1 The nymph Menthe.
2 Anemone, "the wind-flower."
CARMINE dum tali silvas animosque ferarum Threicius vates et saxa sequentia ducit, eece nurus Ciconum tectae lymphata ferinis pectora velleribus tumuli de vertice cernunt Orphea percussis sociantem carmina nervis.
e quibus una leves iactato crine per auras,
"en," ait "en, hic est nostri contemptor!" et hastam vatis Apollinei vocalia misit in ora, quae foliis praesuta notam sine vulnere fecit;
alterius telum lapis est, qui missus in ipso aere concentu victus vocisque lyraeque est ac veluti supplex pro tam furialibus ausis ante pedes iacuit. sed enim temeraria crescant bella modusque abit insanaque regnat Erinys; cunctaque tela fovent cantu mollita, sed ingens clamor et infracto Berecyntia tibia cornu tympanaque et plausus et Bacchei ululatus obstrepuere sono citharae, tum denique saxa non exauditi rubuerunt sanguine vatis.
ac primum attonitas etiamnum voce canentis innumeratas volucres anguesque agmenque ferarum maenades Orphei titulum rapuere theatric inde cruentatis vertuntur in Orphea dextris BOOK XI

While with such songs the bard of Thrace drew the trees, held beasts enthralled and constrained stones to follow him, behold, the crazed women of the Cicones, with skins flung over their breasts, saw Orpheus from a hill-top, fitting songs to the music of his lyre. Then one of these, her tresses streaming in the gentle breeze, cried out: "See, see, here is the man who scorns us!" and hurled her spear straight at the tuneful mouth of Apollo's bard; but this, wreathed in leaves, marked without harming him. Another threw a stone, which, even as it flew through the air, was overcome by the sweet sound of voice and lyre, and fell at his feet as if 'twould ask forgiveness for its mad attempt. But still the assault waxed reckless: their passion knew no bounds; mad fury reigned and all their weapons would have been harmless under the spell of song; but the huge uproar of the Berecyntian flutes, mixed with discordant horns, the drums, and the breast-beatings and howlings of the Bacchanals, drowned the lyre's sound; and then at last the stones were reddened with the blood of the bard whose voice they could not hear. First away went the multitudinous birds still spellbound by the singer's voice, with the snakes and the train of beasts, the glory of Orpheus' audience, harried by the Maenads; then these turned bloody hands against Orpheus and flocked around like birds when they see the bird et coeunt ut aves, si quando luce vagantem noctis avem cernunt, structoque utrimque theatro 25 ceu matutina cervus periturus harena praedae canum est, vatemque petunt et fronde virentes coniciunt thyrsos non haec in munera factos.
hae glaebas, illae direptos arbores ramos, pars torquent silices; neu desint tela furori, forte boves presso subigebant vomere terram, nec procul hinc multum fructum sudore parantes dura lacertosi fodiebant arva coloni, agmine qui viso fugiunt operisque relinquunt arma sui, vacuosque iacent dispersa per agros 30 sarculaque rastrique graves longique ligones;
quae postquam rapuere ferae cornuque minaces divulserc boves, ad vatis fata recurrunt tendentemque manus et in illo tempore primum inrita dicentem nec quicquam voce moventem sacrilegae perimunt, perque os, pro Iuppiter! illud auditum saxis intellectumque ferarum sensibus in ventos anima exhalata recessit.
Te maestae volucre, Orpheus, te turba ferarum, te rigidi silices, te carmina saepe secuta 40 fleverunt silvae, positis te frondibus arbor tonsa comas luxit; lacrimis quoque flumina dicunt increvisse suis, obstrusaque carbasa pullo naides et dryades passosque habuere capillos.
membra iacent diversa locis, caput, Hebre, lyra excipis: et (mirum!) medio dum labitur amne, 45 122 of night wandering in the daylight; and as when in the amphitheatre in the early morning of the spectacle the doomed stag in the arena is the prey of dogs.
They rushed upon the bard and hurled at him their wands wreathed with green leaves, not made for such use as this. Some threw clods, some branches torn from trees, and some threw stones. And, that real weapons might not be wanting to their madness, it chanced that oxen, toiling beneath the yoke, were plowing up the soil; and not far from these, stout peasants were digging the hard earth and sweating at their work. When these beheld the advancing horde, they fled away and left behind the implements of their toil. Scattered through the deserted fields lay hoes, long mattocks and heavy grubbing-tools. These the savage women caught up and, first tearing in pieces the oxen who threatened them with their horns, they rushed back to slay the bard;
and, as he stretched out his suppliant hands, uttering words then, but never before, unheeded, and moving them not a whit by his voice, the impious women struck him down. And (oh, the pity of it!) through those lips, to which rocks listened, and to which the hearts of savage beasts responded, the soul, breathed out, went faring forth in air.

The mourning birds wept for thee, Orpheus, the throng of beasts, the flinty rocks, and the trees which had so often gathered to thy songs; yes, the trees shed their leaves as if so tearing their hair in grief for thee. They say that the rivers also were swollen with their own tears, and that naiads and dryads alike mourned with dishevelled hair and with dark-bordered garments. The poet’s limbs lay scattered all around; but his head and lyre, O Hebrus, thou didst receive, and (a marvel!) while they floated in flebile nescio quid queritur lyra, flebile lingua murmurat examinis, respondent flebile ripae.
iamque mare invectae flumen populare relinquent et Methymnæae potiuntur litore Lesbi:
hic ferus expositum peregrinis anguis harenis os petit et sparsos stillanti rore capillos.
tandem Phoebus adest morsusque inferre parantem arcet et in lapidem rictus serpentis apertos congelat et patulos, ut erant, indurat hiatus.

Umbra subit terras, et quae loca viderat ante, cuncta recognoscit quaerensque per arva piorum invenit Eurydicen cupidisque amplectitur ulnis;
hic modo coniunctis spatiatur passibus ambo, nunc praecedentem sequitur, nunc praevius anteit Eurydicenque suam, iam tuto, respicit Orpheus.
Non inpune tamen scelus hoc sinit esse Lyæus amiosoque dolens sacrorum vate suorum protinus in silvis matres Edonidas omnes, quae videre nefas, torta radice ligavit;
quippe pedum digitos, in quantum est quaeque secuta, traxit et in solidam detrusit acumina terram, utque suum laqueis, quos callidus abdidit auceps, crus ubi commisit volucris sensitque teneri, plangitur ac trepidans adstringit vincula motu:
sic, ut quaeque solo defixa cohaeserat harum, exsternata fugam frustra temptabat, at illam lenta tenet radix exsultantemque coercet, dumque ubi sint digiti, dum pes ubi, quaerit, et ungues, aspicit in teretes lignum succedere suras.
mid-stream the lyre gave forth some mournful notes, mournfully the lifeless tongue murmured, mournfully the banks replied. And now, borne onward to the sea, they left their native stream and gained the shore of Lesbos near the city of Methymna.
Here, as the head lay exposed upon a foreign strand,
a savage serpent attacked it and its streaming locks still dripping with the spray. But Phoebus at last appeared, drove off the snake just in the act to bite, and hardened and froze to stone, just as they were,
the serpent's widespread, yawning jaws.

The poet's shade fled beneath the earth, and recognized all the places he had seen before; and, seeking through the blessed fields, found Eurydice and caught her in his eager arms. Here now side by side they walk; now Orpheus follows her as she precedes, now goes before her, now may in safety look back upon his Eurydice.

However, Lyaeus did not suffer such crime as this to go unavenged. Grieved at the loss of the bard of his sacred rites, he straightway bound fast all those Thracian women, who saw the impious deed, with twisted roots. For he prolonged their toes and, in so far as each root followed down, he thrust their tips into the solid earth. And as a bird, when it has caught its foot in the snare which the cunning fowler has set for it, and feels that it is caught, flaps and flutters, but draws its bonds tighter by its struggling; so, as each of these women, fixed firmly in the soil, had stuck fast, with wild affright, but all in vain, she attempted to flee. The tough roots held her, and though she struggled, kept firm their grasp. And when she asked where were her fingers, where her feet, her nails, she saw the bark come creeping up her shapely legs; striving to smite her thighs with et conata femur maerenti plangere dextra robora percussit, pectus quoque robora fiunt, robora sunt umeri; longos quoque bracchia versa esse putes ramos, et non fallare putando.

Nec satis hoc Baccho est, ipsos quoque deserit agros cumque choro meliore sui vineta Timoli Pactolonque petit, quamvis non aureus illo tempore nec caris erat invidiosus harenis.
hunc adsueta cohors, satyri bacchaequae, frequentant, at Silenus abest: titubantem annisque meroque ruricolae cepere Phryges vinctumque coronis ad regem duxere Midan, cui Thracius Orpheus orgia tradiderat cum Cecropio Eumolpo.
qui simul agnovit socium comitemque sacrorum, hospitis adventu festum genialiter egit per bis quinque dies et iunctas ordine noctes, et iam stellarum sublime coegerat agmen Lucifer undecimus, Lydos cum laetus in agros rex venit et iuveni Silenum reddit alumno.

Huic deus optandi gratum, sed inutile fecit muneris arbitrium gaudens altore recepto.
ille male usurus donis ait "effice, quicquid corpore contigero, fulvum vertatur in aurum." adnuitt optatis nocituraque munera solvit Liber et indoluit, quod non meliora petisset.
laetus abit gaudetque malo Berecyntius heros pollieitique fidem tangendo singula temptat vixque sibi credens, non alta fronde virentem ilice detraxit virgam: virga aurea facta est:
hands of grief, she smote on oak. Her breasts also became of oak; oaken her shoulders. Her arms you would think had been changed to long branches—nor would your thought be wrong.

Nor is this enough for Bacchus. He leaves their very fields and with a worthier band seeks the vineyards of his own Timolus and his Pactolus; although this was not at that time a golden stream, nor envied for its precious sands. His usual company, satyrs and bacchanals, thronged round him; but Silenus was not there. Him, stumbling with the weight of years and wine, the Phrygian rustics took captive, bound him with wreaths, and led him to Midas, their king. To this Midas, together with the Athenian Eumolpus, Thracian Orpheus had taught the rites of Bacchus. When now the king recognized the comrade and assistant of his revels, right merrily to celebrate the coming of his guest he ordered a festival which they kept for ten continuous days and nights. And now the eleventh dawn had driven away the ranks of stars on high, when the king with joyful heart came to the Lydian fields and gave Silenus back to his dear foster-child.

Then did the god, rejoicing in his foster-father's safe return, grant to the king the free choice of a boon, a pleasing, but useless gift. Midas, fated to make an ill use of his gift, exclaimed: "Grant that whatsoever I may touch with my body may be turned to yellow gold." Bacchus granted his prayer and gave him the baleful gift, grieving the while that he had not asked better. The Berecyntian hero gaily went his way, rejoicing in his fatal gift, and tried its promised powers by touching this and that. Scarcely daring to believe, from a low oak-branch he broke off a green twig: the twig was tollit humo saxum: saxum quoque palluit auro; 110 contigit et glaebam: contactu glæba potenti massa fit; arentis Cereris decerpsit aristas:
aurea messis erat; demptum tenet arbore pomum: Hesperidas donasse putes; si postibus altis admovit digitos, postes radiare videntur;
ille etiam liquidis palmas ubi laverat undis, unda fluens palmis Danaen eludere posset;
vix spes ipse suas animo capit aurea fingens omnia. gaudenti mensas posuere ministri exstructas dapibus nec tostae frugis egentes:
tum vero, sive ille sua Cerealia dextra munera contigerat, Cerealia dona rigebant, sive dapes avido convellere dente parabat, lammina fulva dapes ad moto dente premebat;
miscuerat puris auctorem muneris undis:
fusile per rictus aurum fluitare videres.

Attonitus novitate mali divesque miserque effugere optat opes et quae modo voverat, odit.
copia nulla famem relevat; sitis arida guttur urit, et invisum meritus torquetur ab auro ad caelumque manus et splendida bracchia tollens
"da veniam, Lenaee pater! peccavimus" inquit,
"sed miserere, precor, speciosoque eripe damno!"
mite deum numen: Bacchus peccasse fatentem restituit pactique fide data munera solvit
"neve male optato maneas circumlitus auro, changed to gold. He picked up a stone from the ground: the stone, also, showed a light golden hue. He touched a clod: beneath that magic touch the clod became a mass of gold. He plucked some ripe wheat-heads: it was a golden harvest. He picked an apple from a tree and held it in his hand: you would suppose the Hesperides had given it. If he laid his fingers on the lofty pillars, the pillars gleamed before his eyes. When he bathed his hands in water, the water flowing over his hands could cheat a Danaë. His mind itself could scarcely grasp its own hopes, dreaming of all things turned to gold. As he rejoiced, his slaves set a table before him loaded with meats; nor was bread wanting. Then indeed, if he touched the gift of Ceres with his hand, the gift of Ceres went stiff and hard; or if he tried to bite a piece of meat with hungry teeth, where his teeth touched the food they touched but yellow plates of gold. He mingled pure water with the wine of Bacchus, giver of his gift; but through his jaws you would see the molten gold go trickling.

Amazed by this strange mishap, rich and yet wretched, he seeks to flee his wealth and hates what he but now has prayed for. No store of food can relieve his hunger; his throat is parched with burning thirst, and through his own fault he is tortured by hateful gold. Lifting his hands and shining arms to heaven, he cries: “Oh, pardon me, Lenaeus, father! I have sinned. Yet have mercy, I pray thee, and save me from this curse that looks so fair.” The gods are kind: Bacchus restored him to his former condition when he confessed his fault, and he relieved him of the boon which he had given in fulfilment of his pledge. “And, that you may not remain encased in gold which you have so vade " ait " ad magnis vicinum Sardibus amnem perque iugum Lydum labentibus obvius undis carpe viam, donec venias ad fluminis ortus, spumigeroque tuum fonti, qua plurimus exit, 140 subde caput corpusque simul, simul elue crimem." rex iussae succedit aquae : vis aurea tinxit flumen et humano de corpore cessit in amnem; nunc quoque iam veteris percepto semine venae arva rigent auro madidis pallentia glaebis. 145

Ille perosus opes silvas et rura colebat
Panaque montanis habitantem semper in anris, pingue sed ingenium mansit, nocituraque, ut ante, rursus erant domino stultae praecordia mentis. nam freta prospticiens late riget arduus alto 150 Tmolus in ascensu clivoque extensus utroque Sardibus hinc, illinc parvis finitur Hypaepis. Pan ibi dum teneris iactat sua carmina nymphis et leve cerata modulatur harundine carmen ausus Apollineos prae se contemnere cantus, 155 iudice sub Tmolo certamen venit ad inpar.

Monte suo senior iudex consedit et aures liberat arboribus : quercu coma caerula tantum cingitur, et pendent circum cava tempora glandes. isque deum pecoris spectans " in iudice " dixit 160 "nulla mora est." calamus agrestibus insonat ille barbaricoque Midan (aderat nam forte canenti) carmine delenit ; post hunc sacer ora retorsit Tmolus ad os Phoebi : vultum sua Silva secuta est 130
foolishly desired," he said, "go to the stream which flows by mighty Sardis town, and take your way along the Lydian hills up the tumbling stream until you come to the river's source. There plunge your head and body beneath the foaming fountain where it comes leaping forth, and by that act wash your sin away." The king went to the stream as he was bid. The power of the golden touch imbued the water and passed from the man's body into the stream. And even to this day, receiving the seed of the original vein, the fields grow hard and yellow, their soil soaked with water of the golden touch.

But Midas, hating wealth, haunted the woods and fields, worshipping Pan, who has his dwelling in the mountain caves. But stupid his wits still remained, and his foolish mind was destined again as once before to harm its master. For Tmolus, looking far out upon the sea, stands stiff and high, with steep sides extending with one slope to Sardis, and on the other reaches down to little Hypaepae. There, while Pan was singing his songs to the soft nymphae and playing airy interludes upon his reeds close joined with wax, he dared speak slightly of Apollo's music in comparison with his own, and came into an ill-matched contest with Tmolus as the judge.

The old judge took his seat upon his own mountain-top, and shook his ears free from the trees. His dark locks were encircled by an oak-wreath only, and acorns hung around his hollow temples. He, looking at the shepherd-god, exclaimed: "There is no delay on the judge's part." Then Pan made music on his rustic pipes, and with his rude notes quite charmed King Midas, for he chanced to hear the strains. After Pan was done, venerable Tmolus turned his face towards Phoebus; and his forest turned with his face.
ille caput flavum lauro Parnaside vinctus verrit humum Tyrio saturata murice palla instrictamque fidem gemmis et dentibus Indis sustinet a laeva, tenuit manus altera plectrum; artificis status ipse fuit. tum stamina docto pollice sollicitat, quorum dulcedine captus Pana iubet Tmolus citharae submittere cannas.

Judicium sanctique placet sententia montis omnibus, arguitur tamen atque iniusta vocatur unius sermone Midae; nec Delius aures humanam stolidas patitur retinere figuram, sed trahit in spatium villisque albentibus inplet instabilesque imas facit et dat posse moveri:
cetera sunt hominis, partem damnatur in unam induiturque aures lente gradientis aselli.
ille quidem celare cupit turpisque pudore tempora purpureis temptat velare tiaris;
sed solitus longos ferro resecare capillos viderat hoc famulus, qui cum nec prodere visum dedecus auderet, cupiens efferre sub auras, nec posset reticere tamen, secedit humumque effodiit et, domini quales adspexerit aures, voce refert parva terraeque inmurmurat haustae indicumque suae vocis tellure regesta obruit et scrobiibus tacitus discedit opertis.
creber harundinibus tremulis ibi surgere lucus coepit et, ut primum pleno maturuit anno, prodidit agricolam: leni nam motus ab austro obruta verba refert dominique coarguit aures.

Ultus abit Tmolo liquidumque per aera vectus angustum citra pontum Nepheleidos Helles Phoebus' golden head was wreathed with laurel of Parnasus, and his mantle, dipped in Tyrian dye, swept the ground. His lyre, inlaid with gems and Indian ivory, he held in his left hand, while his right hand held the plectrum. His very pose was that of an artist. Then with trained thumb he plucked the strings and, charmed by those sweet strains, Tmolus ordered Pan to lower his reeds before the lyre.

All approved the judgment of the sacred mountain-god. And yet it was challenged and called unjust by Midas' voice alone. The Delian god did not suffer ears so dull to keep their human form, but lengthened them out and filled them with shaggy, grey hair; he also made them unstable at the base and gave them power of motion. Human in all else, in this one feature was he punished, and wore the ears of a slow-moving ass. Disfigured and ashamed, he strove to hide his temples beneath a purple turban, but the slave who was wont to trim his long hair beheld his shame. And he, since he dared not reveal the disgraceful sight, yet eager to tell it out and utterly unable to keep it to himself, went off and dug a hole in the ground and into the hole, with low, muttered words, he whispered of his master's ears which he had seen. Then by throwing back the earth he buried the evidence of his voice and, having thus filled up the hole again, he silently stole away. But a thick growth of whispering reeds began to spring up there, and these, when at the year's end they came to their full size, betrayed the sower, for, stirred by the gentle breeze, they repeated his buried words and exposed the story of his master's ears.

His vengeance now complete, Latona's son retires from Tmolus and, borne through the liquid air, without crossing the narrow sea of Helle, daughter of Laomedonteis Latoius adstitit arvis.
dextera Sigei, Rhoetei laeva profundi ara Panomphaeo vetus est sacrata Tonanti:
inde novae primum moliri moenia Troiae Laomedonta videt susceptaque magna labore crescere difficili nec opes exposcere parvas cumque tridentigero tumidi genitore profundi mortalem induitur formam Phrygiaeque tyranno aedificat muros pactus pro moenibus aurum.
stabat opus: pretium rex insitiatur et addit, perfidiae cumulum, falsis periuria verbis.
"non inpune feres" rector maris inquit, et omnes inclinavit aquas ad avarae litora Troiae inque freti formam terras conplevit opesque abstulit agricolis et fluctibus obruit agros.
poena neque haec satis est: regis quoque filia monstro poscitur aequoreo, quam dura ad saxa revinctam vindicat Alcides promissaque munera dictos poscit equos tantique operis mercede negata bis periura capit superatae moenia Troiae.
nec, pars militiae, Telamon sine honore recessit Hesionisque data potitur. nam coniuge Peleus clarus erat diva nec avi magis ille superbus nomine quam soceri, siquidem Iovis esse nepoti contigit haut uni, coniunx dea contigit uni.
Nephele, he came to earth in the country of Laomedon. Midway between the Sigean and Rhoetean promontories was an ancient altar sacred to the Panomphaean Thunderer. There Apollo saw Laomedon beginning to build the walls of his new city, Troy; and, perceiving that the mighty task was proceeding with great difficulty, and demanded no slight resources, he, together with the trident-bearing father of the swollen sea, put on mortal form and built the walls for the Phrygian king, having first agreed upon a sum of gold for the walls. There stood the work. But the king repudiated his debt and, as a crowning act of perfidy, swore that he had never promised the reward. "But you shall not go unpunished," the sea-god said, and he set all his waters flowing against the shores of miserly Troy. He flooded the country till it looked like a sea, swept away the farmers' crops and whelmed their fields beneath his waters. Nor was this punishment enough; the king's daughter also must be sacrificed to a monster of the deep. But while she was bound there to the hard rocks, Alcides set her free, and then demanded his promised wage, the horses that were agreed upon. But the great task's price was again refused, and so the hero took the twice-perjured walls of conquered Troy. Nor did Telamon, the partner of his campaign, go without reward, and Hesione was given him. For Peleus was honoured with a goddess for his bride, and was not more proud of his grandfather's name than of his father-in-law; since it had fallen to not one alone to be grandson of Jove, but to him alone had it fallen to have a goddess for his wife.

1 Peleus also had assisted Hercules in this exploit.
Namque senex Thetidi Proteus "dea" dixerat "unda, concipe: mater eris iuvenis, qui fortibus annis acta patris vincet maiorque vocabitur illo."
ergo, ne quicquam mundus Iove maius haberet, quamvis haut tepidos sub pectore senserat ignes, 225 Iuppiter aequoreae Thetidis conubia fugit, in suaque Aeaciden succedere vota nepotem iussit et amplexus in virginis ire marinae.

Est sinus Haemoniae curvos falcatus in arcus, bracchia procurrunt: ubi, si foret altior unda, 230 portus erat; summis inductum est aequor harenis;
litus habet solidum, quod nec vestigia servet nec remoretur iter nec opertum pendeat alga; myrtea silva subest bicoloribus obsita bacis.
est specus in medio, natura factus an arte, 235 ambiguum, magis arte tamen: quo saepe venire frenato delphine sedens, Theti, nuda solebas.
illic te Peleus, ut somno vineta iacebas, occupat, et quoniam precibus temptata repugnas, vim parat, innectens ambobus colla lacertis; 240 quod nisi venisses variatis saepe figuris ad solitas artes, auso foret ille potitus;
sed modo tu volucris: volucrem tamen ille tenebat;
nunc gravis arbor eras: haerebat in arbore Peleus;
tertia forma fuit maculosae tigridis: illa 245 territus Aeacides a corpore bracchia solvit.
usque deos pelagi vino super aequora fuso 136
For old Proteus had said to Thetis: “O goddess of the waves, conceive: thou shalt be the mother of a youth who, when to manhood grown, shall outdo his father’s deeds and shall be called greater than he.” Because of this, lest the earth should produce anything greater than himself, though he had felt the hot fires of love deep in his heart, Jove shunned the arms of Thetis, goddess of the sea, and bade his grandson, the son of Aeacus, assume the place of lover in his stead, and seek a union with this virgin of the deep.

There is a bay on the Thessalian coast, rounded like a curved sickle, with arms running out; 'twould be a safe port for ships if the water were deeper. The sea spreads smooth over the sandy bottom; the shore is firm, such as leaves no trace of feet, delays no journey, is free from seaweed. A myrtle wood grows close at hand, thick-hung with two-coloured berries. There is a grotto in this grove, whether made by nature or art one may not surely say, but rather by art. To this grot oftentimes, riding thy briddled dolphin, O Thetis, naked wast thou wont to come. There then did Peleus seize thee as thou layest wrapped in slumber; and since, though entreated by his prayers, thou didst refuse, he prepared to force thy will, entwining thy neck with both his arms. And hadst thou not, by changing oft thy form, had recourse to thine accustomed arts, he would have worked his daring will on thee. But now didst thou take the form of a bird: still he held fast to the bird. Now wast thou a sturdy tree; around the tree did Peleus tightly cling. Thy third disguise was a spotted tigress' form: in fear of that Peleus loosed his hold on thee. Then did he pray unto the gods of the sea with wine poured out.
et pecoris fibris et fumo turis adorat, donec Carpathius medio de gurgite vates
"Aeacide," dixit "thalamis potiere petitis, tu modo, cum rigido sopita quiescet in antro, ignaram laqueis vincloque innecte tenaci.
nece te decipiat centum mentita figuras, sed preme, quicquid erit, dum, quod fuit ante, reformet."
dixerat haec Proteus et condidit aequore vultum admisitque suos in verba novissima fluctus.

Pronus erat Titan inclinatoque tenebat Hesperium temone fretum, cum pulchra relecto Nereis ingreditur consueta cubilia saxo; vix bene virgineos Peleus invaserat artus:
illa novat formas, donec sua membra teneri sentit et in partes diversas brachia tendi.
tum demum ingemuit, "neque" ait "sine numine vincis"

exhibita estque Thetis: confessam amplexitetur heros et potitur votis ingentique inplet Achille.

Felix et nato, felix et coniuge Peleus, et cui, si demas iugulati crimina Phoci, omnia contigerant: fraterno sanguine suntem expulsumque domo patria Trachinia tellus accipit. hic regnum sine vi, sine caede regebat Lucifero genitore satus patriumque nitorem ore ferens Ceyx, illo qui tempore maestus dissimilisque sui fratrem lugebat ademptum.

quo postquam Aeacides fessus curaque viaque upon the water, with entrails of sheep, and with the smoke of incense; until the Carpathian seer from his deep pools rose and said to him: "O son of Aeacus, thou shalt yet gain the bride thou dost desire. Only do thou, when she lies within the rocky cave, deep sunk in sleep, bind her in her unconsciousness with snares and close-clinging thongs. And though she take a hundred lying forms, let her not escape thee, but hold her close, whatever she may be, until she take again the form she had at first." So spoke Proteus and hid his face beneath the waves, as he let his waters flow back again over his final words.

Now Titan was sinking low and kept the western sea beneath his down-sloping chariot, when the fair Nereid, seeking again the grot, lay down upon her accustomed couch. There scarce had Peleus well laid hold on her virgin limbs, when she began to assume new forms, until she perceived that she was held firmly bound and that her arms were pinioned wide. Then at length she groaned and said: "'Tis not without some god's assistance that you conquer," and gave herself up as Thetis. Her, thus owning her defeat, the hero caught in his embrace, attained his desire, and begat on her the great Achilles.

Peleus was blessed in his son, blessed in his wife, and to him only good befell, if you except the crime of the murdered Phocus. Driven from his father's house with his brother's blood upon his hands, he found asylum in the land of Trachis. Here ruled in peaceful, bloodless sway Ceyx, son of Lucifer, with all his father's bright gladness in his face. But at that time he was sad and unlike himself, for he was mourning the taking off of his brother. To him the son of Aeacus came, worn with his cares and venit et intravit paucis comitantibus urbein, quamque greges pecorum, quae secum armenta trahebat, haut procul a muris sub opaca valle reliquit; copia cum facta est adeundi prima tyranni, velamenta manu praetendens supplice, qui sit quoque satus, memorat, tantum sua criminæ celat mentiturque fugae causam; petit, urbe vel agro se iuvet. hunc contra placido Trachinius ore talibus adloquitur: "mediae quoque commoda plebi nostra patent, Peleu, nec inhospita regna tenemus; adicis huic animo momenta potentia, clarum nomen avumque Iovem; ne tempora perde precando! quod petis, omne feres tuaque haec pro parte vocato, qualiacumque vides! utinam meliora videres!" et flebat: moveat tantos quae causa dolores, Peleusque comitesque rogant; quibus ille profatur: "forsitan hanc volucrem, rapto quae vivit et omnes terret aves, semper pennas habuisse putetis: vir fuit (et—tanta est animi constantia—tantum acer erat belloque ferox ad vimque paratus) nomine Daedalion. illo genitore creatis, qui vocat Auroram caeloque novissimus exit, culta mihi pax est, pacis mihi cura tenendae coniugiique fuit, fratri fera bella placebant: illius virtus reges gentesque subegit, quae nunc Thisbaeas agitat mutata columbas. nata erat buie Chione, quae dotatissima forma journeyings, and entered his city with but a few retainers following. He left the flocks of sheep and the cattle which he had brought with him in a shady vale not far from the city's walls; then, when first he was allowed to approach the monarch, stretching out with suppliant hand an olive-branch wound with woollen fillets, he told him who he was and from what father sprung. He concealed only his crime, and lied concerning the reason for his flight. He begged for a chance to support himself in city or in field. To him the Trachinian monarch with kind words replied: "The opportunities of our realm lie open, Peleus, even to humble folk, and we do not rule an inhospitable kingdom. To this our kindly disposition you add the strong incentive of an illustrious name and descent from Jove. Then waste no time in prayer. You shall have all you seek. Call all this your own whatsoever you see; and I would that you saw better!" He spoke and wept. When Peleus and his companions asked him the cause of his great grief, he answered them: "Perchance you think that yonder bird, which lives on rapine and is the terror of all birds, was always a feathered creature. He was once a man (and, so fixed is character, his only qualities were harshness, eagerness for war, readiness for violence), by name Daedalion. We two were born of that god who wakes the dawn and passes last from the sky. I was by nature peaceful and my care was always for preserving peace and for my wife. But cruel war was my brother's pleasure. His fierce courage subdued kings and nations, and now in changed form it pursues the doves of Thisbe.¹ He had a daughter, Chione, a girl

¹ A little town on the coast of Boeotia, famous for its wild doves.
mille procos habuit, bis septem nubilis annis. forte revertentes Phoebus Maiaque creatus, ille suis Delphis, hic vertice Cylleneo, videre hanc pariter, pariter traxere calorem. spem veneris differt in tempora noctis Apollo; non fert ille moras virgaque movente soporem virginis os tangit: tactu iacet illa potenti vimque dei patitur; nox caelum sparserat astris: Phoebus anum simulat praereptaque gaudia sumit. ut sua maturus conplevit tempora venter, alipedis de stirpe dei versuta propago nascituar Autolycus furtum ingeniosus ad omne, candida de nigris et de candentibus atra qui facere adsuerat, patriae non degener artis; nascitur e Phoebo (namque est enixa gemellos) carmine vocali clarus citharaque Philammon. quid peperisse duos et dis placuisse duobus et forti genitore et progenitore nitenti esse satam prodest? an obest quoque gloria? multis obsuit, huic certe! quae se praeferre Dianae sustinuit faciemque deae culpavit, at illi ira ferox mota est ‘factis’ que ‘placebimus’ inquit. nec mora, curvavit cornu nervoque sagittam inpulit et meritam traiecit harundine linguam. lingua tacet, nec vox temptataque verba sequuntur, conantemque loqui cum sanguine vita reliquit; quam miser amplexans ego tum patriumque dolorem corde tuli fratrique pio solacia dixi, quae pater haut aliter quam cautes murmura ponti most richly dowered with beauty, who had a thousand suitors when she had reached the marriageable age of fourteen years. It chanced that Phoebus and the son of Maia, returning the one from Delphi, the other from high Cyllene, beheld her both at once and both at once were filled with love of her. Apollo put off his hope of love till night-time, but the other brooked no delay, and touched the maiden's face with his sleep-compelling wand. She lay beneath the god's magic touch and endured his violence. Now night had spangled the heavens with the stars when Phoebus, assuming an old woman's form, gained his forestalled joy. When the fullness of time was come, a son was born to the wing-footed god, Autolycus, of crafty nature, well versed in cunning wiles. For he could make white of black and black of white, a worthy heir of his father's art. To Phoebus also, for the birth was twin, was born Philammon, famous for song and zither. But what profits it that she bore two sons, that she found favour with two gods, that she herself was sprung from a brave sire and shining grandsire? Is not glory a bane as well? It has been a bane to many, surely to her! For she boldly set herself above Diana and criticized the goddess' beauty. But to her the goddess, moved by hot rage, exclaimed: 'Then by our deeds we'll please you.' Upon the word she bent her bow, sent an arrow swift flying from the string, and pierced that guilty tongue with the shaft. The tongue was stilled, nor voice nor attempted words came more. Even as she tried to speak her life fled forth with her blood. Wretched, I embraced her, feeling her father's grief in my heart, and to my dear brother I spoke words of comfort. The father heard them as the crags hear the murmurs of the sea, and kept accipit et natam delamentatur ademptam; 331 at vero ardentem vidit, quater impetus illi in medios fuit ire rogos, quater inde repulsus concita membra fugae mandat similisque iuvenco spicula crabronum pressa cervice gerenti, 335 qua via nulla, ruit. iam tum mihi currere visus plus homine est, alasque pedes sumpsisse putares.
effugit ergo omnes veloxque cupidine leti vertice Parnasi potitur; miseratus Apollo, cum se Daedalion saxo misisset ab alto, fecit avem et subitis pendentem sustulit alis oraque adunca dedit, curvos dedit unguibus hamos, virtutem antiquam, maiores corpore vires, et nunc accipiter, nulli satis aequus, in omnes saevit aves aliisque dolens fit causa dolendi.” 345

Quae dum Lucifero genitus miracula narrat de consorte suo, cursu festinus anhelo advolat armenti custos Phoceus Onetor et “Peleu, Peleu! magnae tibi nuntius adsim cladis” ait. quocumque ferat, iubet edere Peleus, pendet et ipse metu trepidi Trachinius oris; 351 ille refert “fessos ad litora curva iuvencos adpuleram, medio cum Sol altissimus orbe tantum respicaret, quantum superesse videret, parsque boum fulvis genua inclinarat harenis latarumque iacens campos spectabat aquarum, pars gradibus tardis illuc errabat et illuc;
nant alii celsoque instant super aequora collo.
templa mari subsunt nec marmore clara neque auro, sed trabibus densis lucoque umbroso vetusto: 360 Nereides Nereusque tenent (hos navita ponti ever bewailing his lost child. But when he saw her burning, four times he made to rush into the blazing pile. Four times thrust back, he took to mad flight and, like a bullock whose neck is pierced by hornets' stings, over trackless ways he rushed. Even then he seemed to me to run faster than human powers allow, and you would have thought his feet had taken wings. So then he fled us all and quickly, bent on destruction, he gained Parnasus' top. Apollo, pitying him, when Daedalion had hurled himself from that high cliff, made him a bird, held him suspended there on sudden wings, and gave him a hooked beak, gave him curved claws, but he left him his old-time courage and strength greater than his body. And now as a hawk, friendly to none, he vents his cruel rage on all birds and, suffering himself, makes others suffer, too.”

While the son of Lucifer was telling this marvellous story of his brother, Phocian Onetor, Peleus' herdsman, came running in with breathless haste, crying: “Peleus, Peleus! I come to tell you news of dreadful slaughter.” Peleus bade him tell his news, while the Trachinian king himself waited in trembling anxiety. The herdsman went on: “I had driven the weary herd down to the curving shore when the high sun was midway in his course, beholding as much behind him as still lay before. A part of the cattle had kneeled down upon the yellow sands, and lying there were looking out upon the broad, level sea; part was wandering slowly here and there, while others still swam out and stood neck-deep in water. A temple stood near the sea, not resplendent with marble and gold, but made of heavy timbers, and shaded by an ancient grove. The place was sacred to Nereus and the Nereids (these a sailor told me edidit esse deos, dum retia litore siccat); iuncta palus huic est densis obsessa salictis, quam restagnantis fecit maris unda paludem:
inde fragore gravi strepitus loca proxima terret: 365 belua vasta, lupus! mucisque palustribus exit oblitus, et spumis et sparsus sanguine rictus fulmineos, rubra suffusus lumina flamma.
qui quamquam saevit pariter rabieque fameque, acrior est rabie: neque enim ieiunia curat caede bourn diramque famem finire, sed omne vulnerat armentum sternitque hostiliter omne.
pars quoque de nobis funesto saucia morsu, dum defensamus, leto est data; sanguine litus undaque prima rubet demugitaeque paludes. 375 sed mora damnosa est, nec res dubitare remittit:
dum superest aliquid, cuncti coeamus et arma, arma capessamus coniunctaque tela feramus!"
dixerat agrestis: nec Pelea damna movebant, sed memor admissi Nereida conligit orbam 380 damna sua inferias extincto mittere Phoco.
induere arma viros violentaque sumere tela rex iubet Oetaeus; cum quis simul ipse parabat ire, sed Alcyone coniunx excita tumultu prosilit et nondum totos ornata capillos 385
disicit hos ipsos colloque infusa mariti, mittat ut auxilium sine se, verbisque precatur were the gods of that sea, as he dried his nets on the shore). Hard by this temple was a marsh thick-set with willows, which the backwater of the sea made into a marsh. From this a loud, crashing noise filled the whole neighbourhood with fear: a huge beast, a wolf! he came rushing out, smeared with marsh-mud, his great, murderous jaws all bloody and flecked with foam, and his eyes blazing with red fire. He was mad with rage and hunger, but more with rage. For he stayed not to sate his fasting and dire hunger on the slain cattle, but mangled the whole herd, slaughtering all in wanton malice. Some of us, also, while we strove to drive him off, were sore wounded by his deadly fangs and given over to death. The shore, the shallow water, and the swamps, resounding with the bellowings of the herd, were red with blood. But delay is fatal, nor is there time to hesitate. While still there's something left, let us all rush on together, and arms, let us take arms, and make a combined attack upon the wolf!" So spoke the rustic. Peleus was not stirred by the story of his loss; but, conscious of his crime, he well knew that the bereaved Nereid 1 was sending this calamity upon him as a sacrificial offering to her slain Phocus. The Oetaean king bade his men put on their armour and take their deadly spears in hand, and at the same time was making ready to go with them himself. But his wife, Alcyone, roused by the loud outcries, came rushing out of her chamber, her hair not yet all arranged, and, sending this flying loose, she threw herself upon her husband's neck, and begged him with prayers and tears that he would send aid but not go himself, and

1 Psamathe, the mother of Phocus whom Peleus had accidentally killed.
et lacrimis, animasque duas ut servet in una. Aeacides illi: "pulchros, regina, piosque pone metus! plena est promissi gratia vestri. 390 non placet arma mihi contra nova monstra moveri; numen adorandum pelagi est!" erat ardua turris, arce focus summa, fessis nota grata carinis: ascendunt illuc stratosque in litore tauros cum gemitu adspiciunt vastatoremque cruento 395 ore ferum, longos infectum sanguine villos. inde manus tendens in aperti litora ponti caeruleam Peleus Psamathen, ut finiat iram, orat, opemque ferat; nec vocibus illa rogantis flectitur Aeacidae, Thetis hanc pro coniuge supplex accepit veniam. sed enim revocatus ab acri 401 caede lupus perstat, dulcedine sanguinis asper, donec inhaerentem lacerae cervice iuvencae marmore mutavit: corpus praeterque colorem omnia servavit, lapidis color indicat illum 405 iam non esse lupum, iam non debere timeri. nec tamen hac profugum consistere Pelea terra fata sinunt, Magnetas adit vagus exul et illie sumit ab Haemonio purgamina caedis Acasto.

Interea fratrisque sui fratremque secutis 410 anxia prodigiis turbatus pectora Ceyx, consulat ut sacras, hominum oblectamina, sortes, so save two lives in one. Then said the son of Aeacus to her: "Your pious fears, O queen, become you; but have no fear. I am not ungrateful for your proffered help; but I have no desire that arms be taken in my behalf against the strange monster. I must pray to the goddess of the sea." There was a tall tower, a lighthouse on the top of the citadel, a welcome landmark for storm-tossed ships. They climbed up to its top, and thence with cries of pity looked out upon the cattle lying dead upon the shore, and saw the killer revelling with bloody jaws, and with his long shaggy hair stained red with blood. There, stretching out his hands to the shores of the open sea, Peleus prayed to the sea-nymph, Psamathe, that she put away her wrath and come to his help. She, indeed, remained unmoved by the prayers of Peleus; but Thetis, adding her prayers for her husband's sake, obtained the nymph's forgiveness. But the wolf, though ordered off from his fierce slaughter, kept on, mad with the sweet draughts of blood; until, just as he was fastening his fangs upon the torn neck of a heifer, the nymph changed him into marble. The body, save for its colour, remained the same in all respects; but the colour of the stone proclaimed that now he was no longer wolf, that now he no longer need be feared. But still the fates did not suffer the banished Peleus to continue in this land. The wandering exile went on to Magnesia, and there, at the hands of the Hae- monian king, Acastus, he gained full absolution from his bloodguiltiness.

Meanwhile King Ceyx was much disturbed and anxious, not alone about the strange thing that happened to his brother, but also about others that had happened since his brother's fate. Accordingly, that Clariöm parat ire deum; nam templae profanus invia cum Phlegyis faciebat Delphica Phorbas. consilii tamen ante sui, fidissima, certam 415 tefacit, Alcyone; cui protinus intima frigus ossa receperunt, buxoque simillimus ora pallor obit, lacrimisque genae maduere profusis.
ter conata loqui ter fletibus ora rigavit singultuque pias interrupmentente querellas 420"quae mea culpa tuam," dixit "carissime, mentem vertit? ubi est quae cura mei prior esse solebat?
iam potes Alcyone securus abesse relicta?
iam via longa placet? iam sum tibi carior absens?
at, puto, per terras iter est, tantumque dolebo, 425non etiam metuam, curaeque timore carebunt.
aequora me terrent et ponti tristis imago:
et laceras nuper tabulas in litore vidi et saepe in tumulis sine corpore nomina legi.
neve tuum fallax animum fiducia tangat, 430quod socer Hippotades tibi sit, qui carcere fortés contineat ventos, et, cum velit, aequora placet.
cum semel emissi tenerunt aequora venti, nil illis vetitum est: incommendataque tellus omnis et omne fretum est, caeli quoque nubila vexant excutiuntque feris rutilos concursibus ignes.
436quo magis hos novi (nam novi et saepe paterna parva domo vidi), magis hos reor esse timendos.
150
he might consult the sacred oracles, the refuge of mankind in trouble, he planned to journey to the Clarian god. For the infamous Phorbas with the followers of Phlegyas was making the journey to the Delphic oracle unsafe. But before he started he told his purpose to you, his most faithful wife, Alcyone. Straightway she was chilled to the very marrow of her bones, her face grew pale as boxwood and her cheeks were wet with her flowing tears. Three times she tried to speak, three times watered her face with weeping; at last, her loving complaints broken by her sobs, she said: "What fault of mine, O dearest husband, has brought your mind to this? Where is that care for me which used to stand first of all? Can you now abandon your Alcyone with no thought of her? Is it your pleasure now to go on a long journey? Am I now dearer to you when absent from you? But, I suppose, your journey is by land, and I shall only grieve, not fear for you, and my cares shall have no terror in them. The sea affrights me, and the stern visage of the deep; and but lately I saw some broken planks upon the beach, and often have I read men's names on empty tombs. And let not your mind have vain confidence in that the son of Hippotes is your father-in-law, who holds the stout winds behind prison bars, and when he will can calm the sea. For when once the winds have been let out and have gained the open deep, no power can check them, and every land and every sea is abandoned to their will. Nay, they harry the very clouds of heaven and rouse the red lightnings with their fierce collisions. The more I know them (for I do know them, and have often seen them when a child in my father's home) the more I think them to be feared. But if no prayers can change your quod tua si flecti precibus sententia nullis, care, potest, coniunx, nimiumque es certus eundi, 440 me quoque tolle simul! certe iactabimur una, nec nisi quae patiar, metuam, pariterque feremus, quicquid erit, pariter super aequora lata feremur.”
OVID

Talibus Aeolidis dictis lacrimisque movetur sidereus coniunx: neque enim minor ignis in ipso est;
sed neque propositos pelagi dimittere cursus, nec vult Alcyonen in partem adhibere pericli multaque respondit timidum solantia pectus.
non tamen idcirco causam probat; addidit illis hoc quoque lenimen, quo solo flexit amantem: “longa quidem est nobis omnis mora, sed tibi iuro per patrios ignes, si me modo fata remittant, ante reversurum, quam luna bis inpleat orbem.”
his ubi promissis spes est admota recursus, protinus eductam navalibus aequore tingui aptarique suis pinum iubet armamentis; qua rursus visa veluti praesaga futuri horruit Alcyone lacrimasque emisit obortas amplexusque dedit tristique miserrima tandem ore “vale” dixit conlapsaque corpore toto est;
ast iuvenes quaerente moras Ceyce reducunt ordinibus geminis ad fortia pectora remos aequalique ictu scindunt freta: sustulit illa umentes oculos stantemque in puppe recurva concussaque manu dantem sibi signa maritum prima videt redditque notas; ubi terra recessit longius, atque oculi nequeunt cognoscere vultus, 152 purpose, dear husband, and if you are over-bent on going, take me with you, too! For surely we shall then be storm-tossed together, nor shall I fear save only what I feel, and together we shall endure whatever comes, together over the broad billows we shall fare."

With these words and tears of the daughter of Aeolus the star-born husband was deeply moved; for the fire of love burned no less brightly in his heart. And yet he was unwilling either to give up his proposed journey on the sea or to take Alcyone as sharer of his perils. His anxious love strove to comfort her with many soothing words, but for all that he did not win her approval. He added this comforting condition, also, by which alone he gained his loving wife's consent: "Every delay, I know, will seem long to us; but I swear to you by my father's fires, if only the fates will let me, I will return before the moon shall twice have filled her orb." When by these promises of return her hope had been awakened, straightway he ordered his ship to be launched and duly supplied with her equipment. But when Alcyone saw this, as if forewarned of what was to come, she fell to trembling again;
her tears flowed afresh and, embracing her husband in the depth of woe, she said a sad farewell at last and then fainted away completely. But the young men, though Ceyx sought excuses for delay, in double rows drew back the oars to their strong breasts and rent the waters with their rhythmic strokes. Then Alcyone lifted her tear-wet eyes and saw her husband standing on the high-curved poop and waving his hand in first signal to her, and she waved tokens back again. When the land drew further off, and her eyes could no longer make out his features, dum licet, insequitur fugientem lumine pinum;
haec quoque ut haut poterat spatio submota videri, vela tamen spectat summo fluitantia malo;

ut nec vela videt, vacuum petit anxia lectum seque toro ponit: renovat lectusque locusque Alcyonae lacrimas et quae pars admonet absit.

Portibus exierant, et moverat aura rudentes:
obvertit lateri pendentes navita remos cornuaque in summa locat arbore totaque malo carbasae deduct venientesque accipit auras.

aut minus, aut certe medium non amplius aequor puppe secapatur, longeque erat utraque tellus, cum mare sub noctem tumidis albescere coepit fluctibus et praeceps spirare valentius eurus.

"ardua iamdudum demittite cornua" rector clamat "et antemnis totum subnectite velum."
hic iubet; impediunt adversae iussa procellae, nec sinit audiri vocem fragor aequoris ullam:
sponte tamen properant alii subducere remos, pars munire latus, pars ventis vela negare;
egerit hic fluctus aequorque refundit in aequor, hic rapit antemnas; quae dum sine lege geruntur, aspera crescit hiems, omnique e parte ferores bella gerunt venti fretaque indignantia miscent.

ipse pavet nec se, qui sit status, ipse fatetur scire ratis rector, nec quid iubeatve vetetve:
tanta mali moles tantoque potentior arte est.
quipppe sonant clamore viri, stridore rudentes, undarum incursu gravis unda, tonitribus aesther.

154
while yet she could she followed with her gaze the fast-receding ship. When even this was now so distant that it could not be seen, still she watched the sails floating along at the top of the mast. When she could not even see the sails, heavy-hearted she sought her lonely couch and threw herself upon it. The couch and the place renewed her tears, for they reminded her of the part that was gone from her.

They had left the harbour and the breeze had set the cordage rattling. At that the captain shipped his oars, ran the yard up to the top of the mast and spread all his sails to catch the freshening breeze. The ship was now skimming along about midway of the sea, and the land on either side was far away, when, as night came on, the water began to whiten with the roughening waves and the wind, driving ahead, to blow with increased violence. "Lower the yard at once," the captain cries, "and tight reef the sail." So he orders, but the blast blowing in his face drowns out his orders, nor does the uproar of the sea let his voice be heard. Still, of their own will, some hastily draw in the oars, some close the oar-holes, and some reef the sails. Here one is bailing out the water and pouring the sea into the sea, while another hastily secures the spars. While these things are being done, all in confusion, the storm is increasing in violence and from every quarter the raging winds make their attacks and stir up the angry waves. The captain himself is in terror and admits that he does not know how the vessel stands, nor what either to order or forbid; so great is the impending weight of destruction, so much more mighty than his skill. All is a confused uproar—shouts of men, rattling of cordage, roar of the rushing waves, and crash of thunder. The waves run mountain-high and seem fluctibus erigitur caelumque aequare videtur pontus et inductas aspergine tangere nubes;
et modo, cum fulvas ex imo vertit harenas, concolor est illis, Stygia modo nigror unda, sternitum interdum spumisque sonantibus albet.
ipsa quoque his agitur vicibus Trachinia puppis et nunc sublimis veluti de vertice montis despiciere in valles imumque Acheronta videtur, nunc, ubi demissam curvum circumstetit aequor, suspicere inferno summum de gurgite caelum.
saepe dat ingentem fluctu latus icta fragorem nec levius pulsata sonat, quam ferreus olim cum laceras aries balistave concutit arces, utque solent sumptis incursu viribus ire pectore in arma feri protentaque tela leones, sic, ubi se ventis admiserat unda coortis, ibat in arma ratis multoque erat altior illis; iamque labant cunei, spoliataque tegmine cerae rima patet praebetque viam letalibus undis.
ecce cadunt largi resolutis nubibus imbres, inque fretum credas totum descendere caelum, inque plagas caeli tumefactum ascendere pontum.
vela madent nimbis, et cum caelestibus undis aequoreae miscentur aquae; caret ignibus aether, caecaque nox premitur tenebris hiemisque suisque.
discutiunt tamen has praebentque micantia lumen fulmina: fulmineis ardescunt ignibus undae.
dat quoque iam saltus intra cava texta carinae to reach the very heavens, and with their spray to sprinkle the lowering clouds. Now the water is tawny with the sands swept up from the bottom of the sea, and now blacker than the very waters of the Styx. At other times the waves spread out, white with the hissing foam. The Trachiniōn ship herself also is driven on in the grasp of chance. Now, lifted high, as from a mountain-top she seems to look down into deep valleys and the pit of Acheron; now, as she sinks far down and the writhing waters close her in, she seems to be looking up to the top of heaven from the infernal pools. Often with mighty thuds the vessel’s sides resound, beaten by crashing waves as heavily as when sometimes an iron ram or ballista smites a battered fortress. And as savage lions, gaining new strength as they come rushing to the attack, are wont to breast the hunters’ arms and ready spears; so, when the waves had been lashed to fury by the opposing winds, they rushed against the bulwarks of the barque and towered high over them. And now the tightening wedges of the hull spring loose and yawning chinks appear, their covering of wax clean washed away, and give passage to the deadly tide. Behold, the rain falls in sheets from the bursting clouds; and you would think that the whole heavens were falling down into the sea and that the swollen sea was leaping up into the regions of the sky. The sails are soaked with rain, and with the waters from the sky the ocean’s floods are mingled. No stars gleam in the sky and the black night is murky with its own and the tempest’s gloom. Still flashing lightnings cleave the shadows and give light, and the waves gleam red beneath the lightning’s glare. Now also the flood comes pouring within the vessel’s hollow hull; and as a soldier, more eager fluctus; et ut miles, numero praestantior omni, cum saepe adsiluit defensae moenibus urbis, spe potit tur tandem laudisque accensus amore inter mille viros murum tamen occupat unus, sic ubi pulsarunt noviens latera ardua fluctus, vastius insurgens decimae ruit impetus undae nec prius absistit fessam oppugnare carinam, quam velut in captae descendat moenia navis. pars igitur temptabat adhuc invadere pinum, pars maris intus erat: trepidant haud setius omnes, quam solet urbs aliis murum fodientibus extra atque aliis murum trepidare tenentibus intus. deficit ars, animique cadunt, totidemque videntur, quot veniunt fluctus, ruere atque inrumpere mortes. non tenet hic lacrimas, stupet hic, vocat ille beatos, funera quos maneant, hic votis numen adorat brachiaque ad caelum, quod non videt, inrita tollens poscit opem; subeunt illi fraterque paresque, huic cum pignoribus domus et quodcunque relictum est;
OVID

Alcyone Ceyca movet, Ceycis in ore nulla nisi Alcyone est et, cum desideret unam, gaudet abesse tamen; patriae quoque vellet ad oras respicere inque domum supremos vertere vultus, verum, ubi sit, nescit: tanta vertigine pontus fervet, et inducta piceis e nubibus umbra omne latet caelum, duplicataque noctis imago est. frangitur incursu nimbostr turbinis arbor, frangitur et regimen, spoliisque animosa superstes unda, velut victrix, sinuataque despicit undas; nec levius, quam siquis Athon Pindumve revulsos sede sua totos in apertum evertit aequor, than his fellows, when he has often essayed to scale a beleaguered city’s walls, at last succeeds and, fired with the passion for praise, o'erleaps the wall and stands one man amidst a thousand; so, when the waves nine times have battered at the lofty sides, the tenth wave, leaping with a mightier heave, comes on, nor does it cease its attack upon the weary ship until over the ramparts of the conquered barque it leaps within. So now a part of the sea still tries to invade the ship and part is already within its hold. All are in terrified confusion, just as a city is confused when some from without seek to undermine its walls and some hold the walls within. Skill fails and courage falls; and as many separate deaths seem rushing on and bursting through as are the advancing waves. One cannot restrain his tears; another is struck dumb; still another cries they are fortunate whom burial rites await; one calls on the gods in prayer and lifts unavailing arms to the unseen heavens, begging for help; one thinks upon his brothers and his sire, one on his home and children, and each on that which he has left behind. But Ceyx thinks on Alcyone: upon the lips of Ceyx there is no one save Alcyone; and, though he longs for her alone, yet he rejoices that she is far away. How he would love to look towards his native shores again and turn his last gaze upon his home. But where he is he knows not; for the sea boils in such whirling pools and the shadows of the pitchy clouds hide all the sky and double the darkness of the night. The mast is broken by a whirling rush of wind; the rudder, too, is broken. One last wave, like a victor rejoicing in his spoils, heaves itself high and looks down upon the other waves; and, as if one should tear from their foundations Athos and Pindus and hurl them bodily into the open sea, so fell this praecipitata cadit pariterque et pondere et ictu mergit in ima ratem; cum qua pars magna virorum gurgite pressa gravi neque in aera reddita fato functiona suo est, alii partes et membra carinae trunca tenent: tenet ipse manu, qua sceptrum solebat, fragmina navigii Ceyx socerumque patremque invocat heu! frustra, sed plurima nantis in ore Alcyone coniunx: illam meminitque refertque, ilius ante oculos ut agant sua corpora flunctus optat et exanimis manibus tumuletur amicis.
dum natat, absentem, quotiens sinit hiscere flunctus, nominat Alcyonen ipsisque inmurmut undis.
ecce super medios flunctus niger arcus aquarum frangitur et rupta mersum caput obruit unda.— Lucifer obscurus nec quem cognoscere posses illa luce fuit, quoniamque exedere caelo non licuit, densis texit sua nubibus ora.

Aeolis interea, tantorum ignara malorum, dinumerat noctes et iam, quas indnat ille, festinat vestes, iam quas, ubi venerit ille, ipsa gerat, reditusque sibi promittit inanes.
omnia illa quidem superis pia tura ferebat, ante tamen cunctos Iunonis templum colebat proque viro, qui nullus erat, veniebat ad aras utque foret sospes coniunx suus utque rediret, nullamque sibi praeserret; at illi hoc de tot votis poterat contingere solum.

At dea non ultra pro functo morte rogari wave headlong, and with its overwhelming weight plunged the ship down to the very bottom; and with the ship the great part of the sailors perished, sucked down in the eddying flood, nevermore to see the light of day. But some still clung to broken pieces of the vessel. Ceyx himself, with the hand that was wont to hold the sceptre, clung to a fragment of the wreck, and called upon his father-in-law and on his father, alas! in vain. But most of all is the name of Alcyone on the swimmer's lips. He remembers her and names her o'er and o'er. He prays that the waves may bear his body into her sight and that in death he may be entombed by her dear hands. While he can keep afloat, as often as the waves allow him to open his mouth he calls the name of his Alcyone, far away, and murmurs it even as the waves close over his lips. See, a dark billow of waters breaks over the surrounding floods and buries his head deep beneath the seething waves. Dim and unrecognizable was Lucifer that dawn; and since he might not leave his station in the skies, he wrapped his face in thick clouds.

Meanwhile the daughter of Aeolus, in ignorance of this great disaster, counts off the nights; now hastens on to weave the robes which he is to put on, and now those which she herself will wear when he comes back, and pictures to herself the home-coming which can never be. She dutifully burns incense to all the gods; but most of all she worships at Juno's shrine, and approaches the altars on behalf of the man who is no more, that her husband may be kept safe from harm, that he may return once more, loving no other woman more than her. And only this prayer of all her prayers could be granted her.

But the goddess could no longer endure these
OVID

sustinet utque manus funestas arceat aris,
"Iri, meae" dixit "fidissima nuntia vocis, vise soporiferam Somni velociter aulam extinctique iube Ceycis imagine mittat somnia ad Alcyonen veros narrantia casus." dixerat: induitur velamina mille colorum Iris et arcuato caelum curvamine signans tecta petit iussi sub nube latentia regis.
Est prope Cimmerios longo spelunca recessu, mons cavus, ignavi domus et penetralia Somni, quo numquam radiis oriens mediusve cadensve Phoebus adire potest: nebulae caligine mixtae exhalantur humo dubiaeque crepuscula lucis.
non vigil ales ibi cristati cantibus oris evocat Auroram, nec voce silentia rumpunt sollitive canes canibusve sagacior anser;
non fera, non pecudes, non moti flamine rami humanaeve sonum reddunt convicia linguae.
muta quies habitat; saxo tamen exit ab imo rivus aquae Lethes, per quem cum murmure labens invitat somnos crepitantibus unda lapillis.
ante fores antri secunda papavera florent innumeræque herbae, quorum de lacte soporem Nox legit et spargit per opacas umida terras.
ianua, ne verso stridores cardine reddat, nulla domo tota, custos in limine nullus;
at medio torus est ebeno sublimis in antro, plumeus, atricolor, pullo velamine tectus, quo cubat ipse deus membris languore solutis.
hunc circa passim varias imitantia formas Somnia vana iacent totidem, quot messis aristas, silva gerit frondes, eiectas litus harenas.
entreaties for the dead. And that she might free her altar from the touch of the hands of mourning, she said: "Iris, most faithful messenger of mine, go quickly to the drowsy house of Sleep, and bid him send to Alcyone a vision in dead Ceyx' form to tell her the truth about his fate." She spoke; and Iris put on her cloak of a thousand hues and, trailing across the sky in a rainbow curve, she sought the cloud-concealed palace of the king of sleep.

Near the land of the Cimmerians there is a deep recess within a hollow mountain, the home and chamber of sluggish Sleep. Phoebus can never enter there with his rising, noontide, or setting rays. Clouds of vapour breathe forth from the earth, and dusky twilight shadows. There no wakeful, crested cock with his loud crowing summons the dawn; no careful watch-dog breaks the deep silence with his voice, or goose, still shrewder than the dog. There is no sound of wild beast or of cattle, of branches rustling in the breeze, no clamorous tongues of men. There mute silence dwells. But from the bottom of the cave there flows the stream of Lethe, whose waves, gently murmuring over the gravelly bed, invite to slumber. Before the cavern's entrance abundant poppies bloom, and countless herbs, from whose juices dewy night distils sleep and spreads its influence over the darkened lands. There is no door in all the house, lest some turning hinge should creak; no guardian on the threshold. But in the cavern's central space there is a high couch of ebony, downy-soft, black-hued, spread with a dusky coverlet. There lies the god himself, his limbs relaxed in languorous repose. Around him on all sides lie empty dream-shapes, mimicking many forms, many as ears of grain in harvest-time, as leaves upon the trees, as sands cast on the shore.
OVID

Quo simul intravit manibusque obstantia virgo Somnia dimovit, vestis fulgere reluxit sacra domus, tardaque deus gravitate iacentes vix oculos tollens iterumque iterumque relabens summaque percutiens nutanti pectora mento 620 excussit tandem sibi se cubitoque levatus, quid veniat, (cognovit enim) scitatur, at illa: “Somne, quies rerum, placidissime, Somne, deorum, pax animi, quem cura fugit, qui corpora duris fessa ministeriis mulces reparasque labori, 625 Somnia, quae veras aequant imitamine formas, Herculea Trachín iube sub imagine regis Aleyonen adeant simulacraque naufragá fíngant.
imperat hoc Iuno.” postquam mandata peregit, Iris abit: neque enim ulterius tolerare soporis 630 vim poterat, labique ut somnum sensit in artus, effugit et remeat per quos modo venerat arcus.

At pater e populo natorum mille suorum excitat artificem simulatoremque figurae Morphea: non illo quisquam sollertius alter 635 exprimit incessus vultumque sonumque loquendi; adicit et vestes et consuetissima cuique verba; sed hic solos homines imitatur, at alter fit fera, fit volucris, fit longo corpore serpens:
hunc Icelon superi, mortale Phobetóra vulgus 640 nominat; est etiam diversae tertius artis Phantasos: ille in humum saxumque undamque trabemque,
quaeque vacant anima, fallaciter omnia transit;
regibus hi ducibusque suos ostendere vultus nocte solent, populos alii plebemque pererrant. 645 praeterit hos senior cunctisque e fratribus unum 164
When the maiden entered there and with her hands brushed aside the dream-shapes that blocked her way, the awesome house was lit up with the gleaming of her garments. Then the god, scarce lifting his eyelids heavy with the weight of sleep, sinking back repeatedly and knocking his breast with his nodding chin, at last shook himself free of himself and, resting on an elbow, asked her (for he recognized her) why she came. And she replied: "O Sleep, thou rest of all things, Sleep, mildest of the gods, balm of the soul, who puttest care to flight, soothest our bodies worn with hard ministries, and preparest them for toil again! Fashion a shape that shall seem true form, and bid it go in semblance of the king to Alcyone in Trachis, famed for Hercules. There let it show her the picture of the wreck. This Juno bids." When she had done her task Iris departed, for she could no longer endure the power of sleep, and when she felt the drowsiness stealing upon her frame she fled away and retraced her course along the arch over which she had lately passed.

But the father rouses Morpheus from the throng of his thousand sons, a cunning imitator of the human form. No other is more skilled than he in representing the gait, the features, and the speech of men; the clothing also and the accustomed words of each he represents. His office is with men alone: another takes the form of beast or bird or the long-bodied serpent. Him the gods call Icelos, but mortals name him Phobetor. A third is Phantasos, versed in different arts. He puts on deceptive shapes of earth, rocks, water, trees, all lifeless things. These shapes show themselves by night to kings and chieftains, the rest haunt the throng of common folk. These the old sleep-god passes by, and chooses out of all the
OVID

Morphea, qui peragat Thaumantidos edita, Somnus eligit et rursus molli languore solutus depositique caput stratoque recondidit alto.
Ille volat nullos strepitus facientibus alis per tenebras intraque morae breve tempus in urbem pervenit Haemoniam, positisque e corpore pennis in faciem Ceycis abit sumptaque figura luridus, exanimi similis, sine vestibus ulla, coniugis ante torum miserae stetit: uda videtur 655 barba viri, madidisque gravis fluere unda capillis.
tum lecto incumbens fletu super ora profuso haec ait: "agnoscis Ceyca, miserrima coniunx, an mea mutata est facies nece? respice: nosces inveniesque tuo pro coniuge coniugis umbram!
nil opis, Alcyone, nobis tua vota tulerunt!
occidimus! falso tibi me promittere noli!
nubilus Aegaeo deprendit in aequore navem Auster et ingenti iactatam flamine solvit, oraque nostra tuum frustra clamantia nomen inplerunt fluctus.—non haec tibi nuntiat auctor ambiguus, non ista vagis rumoribus audis:
ipse ego fata tibi praesens mea naufragus edo.
surge, age, da lacrimas lugubriaque indue nec me indeploratum sub inania Tartara mitte!" adicit his vocem Morpheus, quam coniugis illa crederet esse sui (fletus quoque fundere veros visus erat) gestumque manu Ceycis habebat. ingemit Alcyone, lacrimas movet atque lacertos per somnum corpusque petens amplexitur auras exclamatque: "mane! quo te rapis? ibimus una."
brethren Morpheus alone to do the bidding of Iris, Thaumas' daughter. This done, once more in soft drowsiness he droops his head and settles it down upon his high couch.

But Morpheus flits away through the darkness on noiseless wings and quickly comes to the Haemonian city. There, putting off his wings, he takes the face and form of Ceyx, wan like the dead, and stands naked before the couch of the hapless wife. His beard is wet, and water drips heavily from his sodden hair. Then with streaming eyes he bends over her couch and says: "Do you recognize your Ceyx, O most wretched wife? or is my face changed in death? Look on me! You will know me then and find in place of husband your husband's shade. No help, Alcyone, have your prayers brought to me: I am dead. Cherish no longer your vain hope of me. For stormy Auster caught my ship on the Aegean sea and, tossing her in his fierce blasts, wrecked her there. My lips, calling vainly upon your name, drank in the waves. And this tale no uncertain messenger brings to you, nor do you hear it in the words of vague report; but I myself, wrecked as you see me, tell you of my fate. Get you up, then, and weep for me; put on your mourning garments and let me not go unlamented to the cheerless land of shades." These words spoke Morpheus, and that, too, in a voice she might well believe her husband's; he seemed also to weep real tears, and had the very gesture of her Ceyx' hands. Alcyone groaned, shed tears, and in sleep seeking his arms and to clasp his body, held only air in her embrace. She cried aloud: "Wait for me! Whither do you hasten? I will go with you." Aroused by her own voice and by the image of her voce sua specieque viri turbata soporem executit et primo, si sit, circumspicit, illie, qui modo visus erat; nam moti voce ministri intulerant lumen. postquam non invenit usquam, percutit ora manu laniatque a pectore vestes pectoraque ipsa ferit nec crines solvere curat:
scindit et altrici, quae luctus causa, roganti
"nulla est Alcyone, nulla est" ait. "occidit una cum Ceyce suo. solantia tollite verba!
naufragus interiit: vidi agnovique manusque ad discendentem cupiens retinere tetendi.
umbra fuit, sed et umbra tamen manifesta virique vera mei. non ille quidem, si quaeris, habebat adsuetos vultus nec quo prius, ore nitebat:
pallentem nudumque et adhuc umente capillo infelix vidi. stetit hoc miserabilis ipse ecce loco"; (et quaecit, vestigia siqua supersint).
"hoc erat, hoc, animo quod divinante timebam, et ne me fugeres, ventos sequerere, rogabam.
at certe vellem, quoniam peritus abibas, me quoque duxisses: multum fuit utile tecum ire mihi; neque enim de vitae tempore quicquam non simul egissem, nec mors discreta fuisset.
nunc absens perii, iactor quoque fluctibus absens, et sine me me pontus habet. crudelior ipso sit mihi mens pelago, si vitam ducere nitar longius et tanto pugnem superesse dolori!
sed neque pugnabo nec te, miseraunde, relinquam et tibi nunc saltem veniam comes, inque sepulcro husband, she started wide awake. And first she looked around to see if he was there whom but now she had seen. For her attendants, startled by her cries, had brought a lamp into her chamber. When she did not find him anywhere, she smote her cheeks, tore off her garment from her breast and beat her breasts themselves. She stayed not to loose her hair, but rent it, and to her nurse, who asked what was her cause of grief, she cried: "Alcyone is no more, no more; she has died together with her Ceyx. Away with consoling words! He's shipwrecked, dead! I saw him and I knew him, and I stretched out my hands to him as he vanished, eager to hold him back. It was but a shade, and yet it was my husband's true shade, clearly seen. He had not, to be sure, his wonted features, nor did his face light as it used to do. But wan and naked, with hair still dripping, oh, woe is me, I saw him. See there, on that very spot, he himself stood, piteous"—and she strove to see if any footprints still remained. "This, this it was which with foreboding mind I feared, and I begged you not to leave me and sail away. But surely I should have wished, since you were going to your death, that you had taken me as well. How well had it been for me to go with you; for in that case neither should I have spent any of my life apart from you, nor should we have been separated in our death. But now far from myself I have perished; far from myself also I am tossed about upon the waves, and without me the sea holds me. My heart would be more cruel to me than the sea itself if I should strive still to live on and struggle to survive my sorrow. But I shall neither struggle nor shall I leave you, my poor husband. Now at least I shall come to be your companion; and if not the si non urna, tamen iunget nos littera: si non ossibus ossa meis, at nomen nomine tangam."
plura dolor prohibet, verboque intervenit omni plangor, et attonito gemitus a corde trahuntur.

Mane erat: egreditur tectis ad litus et illum maesta locum repetit, de quo spectarat euntem, dumque moratur ibi dumque "hic retinacula solvit, hoc mihi discedens dedit oscula litore" dicit dumque notata locis reminiscitur acta fretumque prospicit, in liquida, spatio distante, tuetur nescio quid quasi corpus aqua, primoque, quid illud esset, erat dubium; postquam paulum adpulit unda, et, quamvis aberat, corpus tamen esse liquebat, qui foret, ignorans, quia naufragus, omine mota est et, tamquam ignoto lacrimam daret, "heu! miser," inquit "quisquis es, et siqua est coniunx tibi!" fluctibus actum fit propius corpus: quod quo magis illa tuetur, hoc minus et minus est mentis, vae! iamque pro-pinquae
admotum terrae, iam quod cognoscere posset, cernit: erat coniunx! "ille est!" exclamat et una ora, comas, vestem lacerat tendensque trementes ad Ceyca manus "sic, o carissime coniunx, sie ad me, miserande, redis?" ait. adiacet undis facta manu moles, quae primas aequoris undas frangit et incursus quae praedelassat aquarum.
entombed urn, at least the lettered stone shall join us; if not your bones with mine, still shall I touch you, name with name.” Grief checked further speech, wailing took place of words, and groans drawn from her stricken heart.

Morning had come. She went forth from her house to the seashore and sadly sought that spot again from which she had watched him sail. And while she lingered there and while she was saying: “Here he loosed his cable, on this beach he kissed me as he was departing”; while she was thus recalling the incidents and the place and gazing seaward, away out upon the streaming waters she saw something like a corpse. At first she was not sure what it was; but after the waves had washed it a little nearer, although it was still some distance off, yet it clearly was a corpse. She did not know whose it was; yet, because it was a shipwrecked man, she was moved by the omen and, as if she would weep for the unknown dead, she cried: “Alas for you, poor man, whoever you are, and alas for your wife, if wife you have!” Meanwhile the body had been driven nearer by the waves, and the more she regarded it the less and still less could she contain herself. Ah! and now it had come close to land, now she could see clearly what it was. It was her husband! “’Tis he!” she shrieked and, tearing her cheeks, her hair, her garments all at once, she stretched out her trembling hands to Ceyx, crying: “Thus, O dearest husband, is it thus, poor soul, you come back to me?” Near by the water was a mole built which broke the first onslaught of the waters, and took the force of the rushing waves. Thither she ran and leaped into the sea; ’twas a wonder that she could; she flew and, fluttering through the yielding insilit huc, mirumque fuit potuisse: volabat percutiensque levem modo natis aera pennis stringebat summas ales miserabilis undas, dumque volat, maesto similem plenumque querellae ora dedere sonum tenui crepitantium rostro.

ut vero tetigit mutum et sine sanguine corpus, dilectos artus amplexa recentibus alis frigida nequiquam duro dedit oscula rostro.
senserit hoc Ceyx, an vultum motibus undae tollere sit visus, populus dubitabat, at ille senserat: et, tandem superius miserantibus, ambo alite mutantur; satis obnoxius idem tune quoque mansit amor nee coningiale solutum foedus in alitibus: coeunt siumque parentes, perque dies placidos hiberno tempore septem incubat Alcyone pendentibus aequore nidis.
tune iacet unda maris: ventos custodit et arcet Aeolus egressus praestatque nepotibus aequor.

Hos aliiquis senior iunctim freta iata volantes spectat et ad finem servatos laudat amores:
proximus, aut idem, si fors tulit, “hie quoque,” dixit “quem mare carpentem substrictaque crura gerentem aspicis,” (ostendens spatiolum in guttura mergum) “regia progenies, et si descendere ad ipsum ordine perpetuo quaeris, sunt huius origo Ilus et Assaracus raptusque Iovi Ganymedes Laomedonque senex Priamusque novissima Troiae tempora sortitus; frater fuit Hectoris iste:
quie nisi sensisset prima nova fata inventa, forsitan inferius non Hector e nomen haberet, air on sudden wings, she skimmed the surface of the water, a wretched bird. And as she flew, her croaking mouth, with long slender beak, uttered sounds like one in grief and full of complaint. But when she reached the silent, lifeless body, she embraced the dear limbs with her new-found wings and strove vainly to kiss the cold lips with her rough bill. Whether Ceyx felt this, or whether he but seemed to lift his face by the motion of the waves, men were in doubt. But he did feel it. And at last, through the pity of the gods, both changed to birds. Though thus they suffered the same fate, still even thus their love remained, nor were their conjugal bonds loosened because of their feathered shape. Still do they mate and rear their young; and for seven peaceful days in the winter season Alcyone broods upon her nest floating upon the surface of the waters. At such a time the waves of the sea are still; for Aeolus guards his winds and forbids them to go abroad and for his grandsons' sake gives peace upon the sea.

Seeing these birds flying in loving harmony over the broad waters, some old man spoke in praise of their affection kept unbroken to the end. Then one near by, or perhaps the same speaker, pointing to a long-necked diver, said: "That bird also, which you see skimming along over the water and trailing his slender legs, is of royal birth, and his ancestors, if you wish in unbroken line to come down to him himself, were Ilus and Assaracus, Ganymede, whom Jove stole away, old Laomedon and Priam, who came by fate on Troy's last days. He there was the brother of Hector; and had he not met his strange fate in early manhood, perhaps he would have a name no less renowned than Hector's. While the daughter quamvis est illum proles enixa Dymantis, Aesacon umbrosa furtim peperisse sub Ida furtur Alexiroe, Granico nata bicorni. oderat hic urbes nitidaque remotus ab aula secretos montes et inambitiosa colebat rura nec Iliacos coetus nisi rarus adibat. non agreste tamen nec inexpugnabile amori pectus habens silvas captatam saepe per omnes aspicit Hesperien patria Cebrenida ripa iniectos umeris siccantem sole capillos. visa fugit nymphe, veluti perterrita fulvum cerva lupum longeque lacu depressa relictto accipitrem fluvialis anas; quam Troius heros insequitur celeremque metu celer urguet amore. ecce latens herba coluber fugientis adunco dente pedem strinxit virusque in corpore liquit; cum vita suppressa fuga est: amplexitur amens examinem clamatque 'piget, piget esse secutum! sed non hoc timui, neque erat mihi vincere tanti. perdidimus miseram nos te duo: vulnus ab angue, a me causa data est: ego sum sceleratior illo, qui tibi morte mea mortis solacia mittan.' dixit et e scopulo, quem rauca subederat unda, decidit in pontum. Tethys miserata cadentem molliter exceptit nantemque per aequora pennis texit, et optatae non est data copia mortis. indignatur amans, invitum vivere cogi obstarique animae misera de sede volenti 174 of Dymas bore the one, the other, Aesacus, is said to have been borne in secret beneath the shades of Ida by Alexiroë, daughter of the horned Granicus. He hated towns and, far from glittering palace halls, dwelt on remote mountain-sides and in lowly country places, and rarely sought the company of the men of Ilium. Still his heart was not boorish nor averse to love, and often he pursued through all the woody glades Hesperia, daughter of Cebren, whom he beheld drying her hair tossed on her shoulders in the sun upon her father's bank. The nymph fled at sight of him as the frightened hind flees the tawny wolf, or as the wild duck, surprised far from her forsaken pool, flees from the hawk. But the Trojan hero followed her, swift on the wings of love as she was swift on the wings of fear. Behold, a serpent, hiding in the grass, pierced her foot with his curved fangs as she fled along, and left his poison in her veins. Her flight stopped with life. Beside himself, her lover embraced the lifeless form and cried: 'Oh, I repent me, I repent that I followed you! But I had no fear of this, nor was it worth so much to me to win you. We have destroyed you, poor maid, two of us: the wound was given you by the serpent, by me was given the cause! I am more guilty than he. But by my death will I send death's consolation to you.' So saying, from a lofty cliff, where the hoarse waves had eaten it out below, he hurled himself down into the sea. But Tethys, pitying his case, received him gently as he fell, covered him with feathers as he floated on the waters, and so denied him the privilege of the death he sought. The lover was wroth that he was forced to live against his will and that his spirit was thwarted as it desired to leave its wretched exire, utque novas umbris adsumpserat alas, subvolat atque iterum corpus super aequora mittit. pluma levat casus: furit Aesacos inque profundum pronus abit letique viam sine fine retemptat. fecit amor maciem: longa internodia crurum, longa manet cervix, caput est a corpore longe; aequora amat nomenque tenet, quia mergitur illo."

1 Hecuba.
METAMORPHOSES BOOK XI

seat. And when he had gained on his shoulders his new-sprung wings, he flew aloft and once more hurled his body down to the sea; but his light plumage broke his fall. In wild rage Aesacus dived deep down below the water and tried endlessly to find the way to death. His passion made him lean; his legs between the joints are long, his long neck is still long, his head is far from his body. He still loves the sea and has his name because he dives beneath it."

1 Mergus, a diver.
Nescivs adsumptis Priamus pater Aesacon alis vivere lugebat: tumulo quoque, nomen habenti, inferias dederat cum fratribus Hector inani; defuit officio Paridis praesentia tristi, postmodo qui rapta longum cum coniuge bellum attulit in patriam: coniurataeque sequuntur mille rates gentisque simul commune Pelasgæ; nec dilata foret vindicta, nisi aequora saevi invia fecissent venti, Boeotaque tellus Aulide piscosa puppes tenuisset ituras.

hic patrio de more Iovi cum sacra parassent, ut vetus accensis incanduit ignibus ara, serpere caeruleum Danai videre draconem in platanum, coeptis quae stabat proxima sacris. nidus erat volucrum bis quattuor arbore summa: quas simul et matrem circum sua damna volantem corripuit serpens avideoque recondidit ore, obstipuere omnes, at veri providus augur Thestorides "vincemus"; ait, "gaudete, Pelasgi! Troia cadet, sed erit nostri mora longa laboris," atque novem volucres in bello digerit annos.
Father Priam, not knowing that Aesacus was still alive in feathered form, mourned for his son. At an empty tomb also, inscribed with the lost one’s name, Hector with his brothers had offered sacrifices in honour of the dead. Paris was not present at the sad rite, Paris, who a little later brought a long-continued war upon his country with his stolen wife. A thousand ships and the whole Pelasgian race, banded together, pursued him, nor would vengeance have been postponed had not stormy winds made the sea impassable, and had not the land of Boeotia kept the ships, though ready to set sail, at fish-haunted Aulis. When here, after their country’s fashion, they had prepared to sacrifice to Jove, and just as the ancient altar was glowing with the lighted fires, the Greeks saw a dark-green serpent crawling up a plane-tree which stood near the place where they had begun their sacrifices. There was a nest with eight young birds in the top of the tree, and these, together with the mother, who was flying around her doomed nestlings, the serpent seized and swallowed in his greedy maw. They all looked on in amazement. But Thestorides, the augur, who saw clearly the meaning of the portent, said: “We shall conquer. Rejoice, ye Greeks, Troy shall fall, but our task will be of long duration”; and he interpreted the nine birds as nine years of war. Meanwhile the serpent, ille, ut erat virides amplexus in arbore ramos, fit lapis et servat serpentes imagine nixum.

Permanet Aoniis Nereus violentus in undis bellaque non transfert, et sunt, qui parere Troiae Neptunum credant, quia moenia fecerat urbi;
at non Thestorides: nec enim nescitve tacetve sanguine virgineo piacandam virginis iram esse deae. postquam pietatem publica causa rexque patrem vicit, castumque datura cruorem flentibus ante aram stetit Iphigenia ministris, victa dea est nubemque oculis obiecit et inter officium turbamque sacri vocesque precantum supposita fertur mutasse Mycenida cerva.

ergo ubi, qua decuit, lenita est caede Diana, et pariter Phoebes, pariter maris ira recessit, accipiunt ventos a tergo mille carinae multaque perpessae Phrygia potiuntur harena.

Orbe locus medio est inter terrasque fretumque caelestesque plagas, triplicis confinia mundi;
unde quod est usquam, quamvis regionibus absit, inspicitur, penetratque cavas vox omnis ad aures:
Fama tenet summaque domum sibi legit in arce, innumerose aditus ac mille foramina tectis addidit et nullis inclusit limina portis;
nocte dieque patet: tota est ex aere sonanti,

182 just as he was, coiled round the green branches of the tree, was changed to stone, and the stone kept the form of the climbing serpent.

But Nereus continued to be boisterous on the Aonian waters, and refused to transport the war.
And there were some who held that Neptune was sparing Troy because he had built its walls. But not so the son of Thestor. For he was neither ignorant of the truth nor did he withhold it, that the wrath of the virgin goddess \(^1\) must be appeased with a virgin’s blood. After consideration for the public weal had overcome affection, and the father had been vanquished by the king, and just as midst the weeping attendants Iphigenia was standing before the altar ready to shed her innocent blood, the goddess was moved to pity and spread a cloud before their eyes; and there, while the sacred rites went on, midst the confusion of the sacrifice and the cries of suppliants, she is said to have substituted a hind for the maiden of Mycenae. When therefore, as ’twas fitting, Diana had been appeased by the sacrifice of blood, when Phoebe’s and the ocean’s wrath had subsided together, the thousand ships found the winds blowing astern and, after suffering many adventures, they reached the shores of Phrygia.

There is a place in the middle of the world, ’twixt land and sea and sky, the meeting-point of the threefold universe. From this place, whatever is, however far away, is seen, and every word penetrates to these hollow ears. Rumour dwells here, having chosen her house upon a high mountain-top; and she gave the house countless entrances, a thousand apertures, but with no doors to close them. Night and day the house stands open. It is built all of echoing

\(^1\) Diana.
tota fremit vocesque refert iteratque quod audit;
nulla quies intus nullaque silentia parte, nec tamen est clamor, sed parvae murmura vocis, qualia de pelagi, siquis procul audiat, undis esse solent, qualemve sonum, cum Iuppiter atras increpuit nubes, extrema tonitrua reddunt.
atria turba tenet: veniunt, leve vulgus, euntque mixtaque cum veris passim commenta vagantur milia rumorum confusaque verba voluant;
e quibus hi vacuas inplent sermonibus aures, hi narrata ferunt alio, mensuraque ficti crescit, et auditis aliquid novus adicit auctor.
illic Credulitas, illic temerarius Error vanaque Laetitia est consternatique Timores Seditioque recens dubioque auctore Susurri; ipsa, quid in caelo rerum pelagoque geratur et tellure, videt totumque inquirit in orbem.
  Fecerat haec notum, Graias cum milite forti adventare rates, neque inexpectatus in armis hostis adest: prohibent aditus litusque tuentur Troes, et Hectorea primus fataliter hasta, Protesilae, cadi, commissaque proelia magn货架 stant Danais, fortisque animae nece cognitus Hector.
nec Phryges exiguco, quid Achaica dextra posset, 70 sanguine sensorunt, et iam Sigea rubebant litora, iam leto proles Neptunia, Cygnus, mille viros dederat, iam curru instabat Achilles totaque Peliacaee sternebatur cuspidis ictu brass. The whole place is full of noises, repeats all words and doubles what it hears. There is no quiet, no silence anywhere within. And yet there is no loud clamour, but only the subdued murmur of voices, like the murmur of the waves of the sea if you listen afar off, or like the last rumblings of thunder when Jove has made the dark clouds crash together. Crowds fill the hall, shifting throngs come and go, and everywhere wander thousands of rumours, falsehoods mingled with the truth, and confused reports flit about. Some of these fill their idle ears with talk, and others go and tell elsewhere what they have heard; while the story grows in size, and each new teller makes contribution to what he has heard. Here is Credulity, here is heedless Error, unfounded Joy and panic Fear; here sudden Sedition and unauthentic Whispers. Rumour herself beholds all that is done in heaven, on sea and land, and searches throughout the world for news.

Now she had spread the tidings that the Greek fleet was approaching full of brave soldiery; and so not unlooked for did the invading army come. The Trojans were ready to prevent the enemy's landing and to protect their shores. You first fell, Protesilaüs, before Hector's deadly spear. Those early battles proved costly to the Greeks and they soon learned Hector's warlike mettle by the slaughter that he dealt. And the Phrygians learned too, at no slight cost of blood, how puissant was the Grecian hand. And now the Sigean shores grew red; now Neptune's son, Cygnus, had given a thousand men to death; now was Achilles pressing on in his chariot and laying low whole ranks with the stroke of his spear that grew on Pelion; and, as he sought through agmina perque acies aut Cygnum aut Hectora quae congreditur Cygno (decimum dilatus in annum Hector erat): tum colla iugo canentia pressos exhortatus equos currum direxit in hostem concutiensque suis vibrantia tela lacertis
OVID

"quisquis es, o iuvenis," dixit "solamen habeto mortis, ab Haemonio quod sis iugulatus Achille!" hactenus Aeacides: vocem gravis hasta secuta est, sed quamquam certa nullus fuit error in hasta, nil tamen emissi profecit acumine ferri utque hebeti pectus tantummodo contudit ictu. "nate dea, nam te fama praenovimus," inquit ille "quid a nobis vulnus miraris abesse?

(mirabatur enim.) "non haec, quam cernis, equinis fulva iubis cassis neque onus, cava parma, sinistrae auxilio mihi sunt: decor est quaesitus ab istis; Mars quoque ob hoc capere arma solet! removebitur huius tegminis officium: tamen indestrictus abibo;
est aliquid non esse satum Nereide, sed qui Nereaque et natas et totum temperat aequor." dixit et haesurum clipei curvamine telum misit in Aeaciden, quod et aes et proxima rupit terga novena boum, decimo tamen orbe moratum est. excutit hoc heros rursusque trementia forti tela manu torsit: rursus sine vulnere corpus sincerunque fuit; nec tertia cuspis apertum et se praebentem valuit destringere Cygnum. haut secus exarsit, quam circo taurus aperto, the battle’s press either Cygnus or Hector, he met with Cygnus. (Hector’s fate had been postponed until the tenth year.) Then Achilles, shouting to his horses whose snowy necks were straining at the yoke, drove his chariot full at the enemy and, brandishing his spear with his strong arm, cried: “Whoever you are, O youth, have it for solace of your death that you were slain by Achilles of Thessaly.” So spoke Aeacides. His heavy spear followed on the word; but, although there was no swerving in the well-aimed spear, the flying weapon struck with its sharp point without effect, and only bruised his breast as by a blunt stroke. Then Cygnus said: “O son of Thetis, for rumour has already made you known to me, why do you marvel that I am unscathed?” for he was amazed. “Neither this helmet which you behold, yellow with its horse-hair crest, nor yet this hollow shield which burdens my left arm is intended for a protection; ’tis ornament that is sought from them. Mars, too, for this cause, wear his armour. Remove the protection of this covering: still shall I escape unharmed. It is something to be the son, not of Nereus’ daughter, but of him who rules both Nereus and his daughters and the whole sea besides.” He spoke and hurled against Aeacides his spear, destined only to stick in the curving shield. Through brass and through nine layers of bull’s hide it tore its way, but stopped upon the tenth. Shaking the weapon off, the hero again hurled a quivering spear with his strong hand. Again his foeman’s body was unwounded and unharmed; nor did a third spear avail to scratch Cygnus, though he offered his body quite unprotected. Achilles raged at this just like a bull in the broad arena when with his deadly horns he rushes on the scarlet cloak, the object of his cum sua terribili petit inritamina cornu.
OVID

oneceas vestes, elusaque vulnera sentit:
num tamen exciderit ferrum considerat hastae:

"manus est mea debilis ergo, quasque" ait "ante habuit vires, effudit in uno?

nam certe valuit, vel cum Lyrnesia primus moenia deieci, vel cum Tenedonque suoque Eetioneas inplevi sanguine Thebas, vel cum purpureus populari caede Caicus fluxit, opusque meae bis sensit Telephus hastae.

hie quoque tot caesis, quorum per litus acervos et feci et video, valuit mea dextra valetque."
dixit et, ante actis veluti male crederet, hastam misit in adversum Lycia de plebe Menoeten loricamque simul subjectaque pectora rupit.

quo plangente gravem moribundo vertice terram extrahit illud idem calido de vulnere telum atque ait: "haec manus est, haec, qua modo vicimus, hasta:

utar in hoc isdem; sit in hoc, precor, exitus idem!"
sic fatus Cygnum repetit, nec fraxinus errat inque umero sonuit non evitata sinistro, inde velut muro solidaque a caute repulsa est;
qua tamen ictus erat, signatum sanguine Cygnum viderat et frustra fuerat gavisus Achilles:

vulnus erat nullum, sanguis fuit ille Menoetael tum vero praeceps curru fremebundus ab alto desilir et nitido securum comminus hostem ense petens parmam gladio galeamque cavari cernit, at in duro laedi quoque corpore ferrum.

188
wrath, and finds it ever eluding his fierce attack. He examined the spear to see if the iron point had not been dislodged. It was still on the wooden shaft. "Is my hand then so weak," he said, "and has the strength, which it once had, ebbed away in this case alone? For surely I had strength enough when I as leader of the attack overthrew Lyrnesus' walls, or when I caused Tenedos and Thebes, the city of Eetion, to flow with their own blood, when the Caicus ran red with the slaughter of its neighbouring tribes, and when Telephus twice felt the strength of my spear. On this field also, with so many slain, heaps of whose corpses upon the shore I have both made and see, my right hand has been mighty and still is mighty." He spoke and, as if he distrusted his former prowess, he hurled the spear full at Menoetes, one of the Lycian commons, and smote clean through his breastplate and his breast beneath. As his dying victim fell clanging down head first upon the solid earth, Achilles plucked out the spear from the hot wound and cried: "This is the hand, this the spear with which I have just conquered. I likewise shall use it on this foeman, and may the outcome be the same on him, I pray." So saying, he hurled again at Cygnus, and the ashen spear went straight and struck, unshunned, with a thud upon the left shoulder, whence it rebounded as from a wall or from a solid cliff. Yet where the spear struck, Achilles saw Cygnus marked with blood, and rejoiced, but vainly: there was no wound; it was Menoetes' blood! Then truly in headlong rage he leaped down from his lofty chariot and, seeking his invulnerable foe in close conflict with his gleaming sword, he saw both shield and helmet pierced through, but on the unyielding body his sword was even blunted. The haut tulit ulterior clipeoque adversa reecti ter quater ora viri, capulo cava tempora pulsat cedentique sequens instat turbatque ruitque attonitoque negat requiem: pavor occupat illum, ante oculosque natant tenebrae retroque serenti aversos passus medio lapis obstitit arvo; quem super inpulsum resupino corpore Cygnum vi multa vertit terraeque adfixit Achilles.
tum clipeo genibusque premens praecordia duris vincla trahit galeae, quae presso subdita mento elidunt fauces et respiramen utrumque eripiunt animae. victum spoliare parabat:
arma relicta videt; corpus deus aequoris albam contulit in volucrem, cuius modo nomen habebat.

Hic labor, haec requiem multorum pugna dierum attulit et positis pars utraque substitit armis.
dumque vigilant Phrygios servat custodia muros, et vigil Argolicas servat custodia fossas, fasta dies aderat, qua Cygni victor Achilles Pallada mactatae placabat sanguine vaccae;
cuius ut inposuit prosecta calentibus aris, et dis acceptus penetravit in aethera nidor, sacra tulere suam, pars est data cetera mensis.
discubuere toris proceres et corpora tosta carne replent vinoque levant curasque sitimque.
non illos citharae, non illos carmina vocum longave multifori delectat tibia buxi, sed noctem sermone trahunt, virtusque loquendi hero could brook no more, but with shield and sword-hilt again and again he beat upon the face and hollow temples of his uncovered foe. As one gives way the other presses on, buffets and rushes him, gives him no pause to recover from the shock. Fear gets hold on Cygnus; dark shadows float before his eyes, and as he steps backward a stone lying on the plain blocks his way. As he lies with bent body pressed back upon this, Achilles whirls him with mighty force and dashes him to the earth. Then, pressing with buckler and hard knees upon his breast, he un-laces his helmet-thongs. With these applied beneath his chin he chokes his throat and cuts off the passage of his breath. He prepares to strip his conquered foe: he sees the armour empty; for the sea-god has changed the body into the white bird whose name he lately bore.

This struggle, this battle, brought a truce of many days, and each side laid its weapons down and rested. And while a watchful guard was patrolling the Phrygian walls and a watchful guard patrolled the trenches of the Greeks, there came a festal day when Cygnus' conqueror, Achilles, was sacrificing to Pallas with blood of a slain heifer. When now the entrails had been placed upon the blazing altars and the odour which gods love had ascended to the skies, the holy beings received their share and the rest was set upon the tables. The chiefs reclined upon the couches and ate their fill of the roasted flesh while they relieved their cares and quenched their thirst with wine. Nor were they entertained by sound of cithern, nor by the voice of song, nor by the long flute of boxwood pierced with many holes; but they drew out the night in talk, and valour was the theme of their conversation. Of battles was their talk, the materia est: pugnas referunt hostisque suasque, inque vices adita atque exhausta pericula saepe commemorare iuvat; quid enim loqueretur Achilles, aut quid apud magnum potius loquerentur Achillem? proxima praecipue domito victoria Cygno in sermone fuit: visum mirabile cunctis, quod iuveni corpus nullo penetrabile telo invictumque a vulnere erat ferrumque terebat. hoc ipse Aeacides, hoc mirabantur Achivi, cum sic Nestor ait: “vestro fuit unicus aevo contemtor ferri nulloque forabilis ictu Cygnus. at ipse olim patientem vulnera mille corpore non laeso Perrhaebum Caenea vidi, Caenea Perrhaebum, qui factis inclitus Othryn incoluit, quoque id mirum magis esset in illo, femina natus erat.” monstri novitate moventur quisquis adest, narretque rogant: quos inter Achilles: “die age! nam cunctis eadem est audire voluntas, o facunde senex, aevi prudentia nostri, quis fuerit Caeneus, cur in contraria versus, qua tibi militia, cuius certamine pugnae cognitus, a quo sit victus, si victus abullo est.” tum senior: “quamvis obstet mihi tarda vetustas, multaque me fugiant primis spectata sub annis, plura tamen memini. nec quae magis haereat ulla pectore res nostro est inter bellique domique acta tot, ac si quem potuit spatio sa senectus spectatorem operum multorum reddere, vixi annos bis centum; nunc tertia vivitur aetas.

“Clara decore fuit proles Elateia Caenis, enemy's and their own, and 'twas joy to tell over and over again in turn the perils they had encountered and endured. For of what else should Achilles speak, or of what else should others speak in great Achilles' presence? Especially did the talk turn on Achilles' last victory and Cygnus' overthrow. It seemed a marvel to them all that a youth should have a body which no spear could penetrate, invulnerable, which blunted the sword's edge. Aeacides himself and the Greeks were wondering at this, when Nestor said: "In this your generation there has been one only, Cygnus, who could scorn the sword, whom no stroke could pierce; but I myself long ago saw one who could bear a thousand strokes with body unharmed, Thessalian Caeneus: Caeneus of Thessaly, I say, who once dwelt on Mount Othrys, famed for his mighty deeds; and to enhance the marvel of him, he had been born a woman." All who heard were struck with wonder at this marvel and begged him to tell the tale. Among the rest Achilles said: "Tell on, old man, eloquent wisdom of our age, for all of us alike desire to hear, who was this Caeneus, why was he changed in sex, in what campaign did you know him and fighting against whom; by whom he was conquered if he was conquered by anyone." Then said the old man: "Though time has blurred my memory, though many things which I saw in my young years have quite gone from me, still can I remember much; nor is there anything, midst so many deeds of war and peace, that clings more firmly in my memory than this. And, if long-extended age could have made anyone an observer of many deeds, I have lived for two centuries and now am living in my third.

"Famous for beauty was Elatus' daughter, Caenis, Thessalidum virgo pulcherrima, perque propinquas perque tuas urbes (tibi enim popularis, Achille), multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum. temptasset Peleus thalamos quoque forsitan illos: sed iam aut contigerant illi conubia matris aut fuerant promissa tuae, nec Caenis in ullos denupsit thalamos secretaque litora carpens aequorei vim passa dei est (ita fama ferebat), utque novae Veneris Neptunus gaudia cepit, 'sint tua vota licet' dixit 'secura repulsae: elige, quid voveas!' (eadem hoc quoque fama ferebat) 'magnum' Caenis ait 'facit haec inuria votum, tale pati nil posse; mihi da, femina ne sim: omnia praestiteris.' graviore novissima dixit verba sono poteratque viri vox illa videri, sicut erat; nam iam voto deus aequoris alti adnuerat dederatque super, nec saucius ullis vulneribus fieri ferrove occumbere posset. munere laetus abit studiisque virilibus aevum exigit Atracides Peneiaque arva pererrat. "Duxerat Hippodamen audaci Ixione natus nubigenasque feros positis ex ordine mensis arboribus tecto discumbere iusserat antro. Haemonii proceres aderant, aderamus et ipsi, festaque confusa resonabat regia turba. ecce canunt Hymenaeon, et ignibus atria fumant, cinctaque adest virgo matrum nuruumque caterva, most lovely of all the maids of Thessaly, both throughout the neighbouring cities and your own (for she was of your city, Achilles), and she was the longed-for hope of many suitors. Peleus, too, perchance, would have tried to win her; but he had either already wed your mother or she was promised to him. And Caenis would not consent to any marriage; but, so report had it, while walking along a lonely shore she was ravished by the god of the sea. When Neptune had tasted the joys of his new love, he said: 'Make now your prayers without fear of refusal. Choose what you most desire.' This, also, was a part of the same report. Then Caenis said: 'The wrong that you have done me calls for a mighty prayer, the prayer that I may never again be able to suffer so. Grant me that I be not woman: then you will have granted all.' She spoke the last words with a deeper tone which could well seem to be uttered by a man. And so it was; for already the god of the deep ocean had assented to her prayer, and had granted her besides that she should be proof against any wounds and should never fall before any sword. Atracides went away rejoicing in his gift, spent his years in manly exercises, and ranged the fields of Thessaly.

"Bold Ixion's son had wed Hippodame and had invited the cloud-born centaurs to recline at the tables, set in order in a well-shaded grotto. The Thessalian chiefs were there and I myself was there. The palace, in festal array, resounded with the noisy throng. Behold, they were singing the nuptial song, the great hall smoked with the fires, and in came the maiden escorted by a throng of matrons and young wives, herself of surpassing beauty. We congratu-

1 i.e. the Thessalian, Caeneus, the transformed Caenis.
2 Pirithoüs.
praesignis facie; felicem diximus illa coniuge Pirithoum, quod paene fefellimus omen.
nam tibi, saevorum saevissime Centaurorum, Euryte, quam vino pectus, tam virgine visa ardet, et ebrietas geminata libidine regnat.
protinus eversae turbant convivia mensae, raptaturque comis per vim nova nupta prehensis.
Eurytus Hippodamen, alii, quam quisque probabant aut poterant, rapiunt, captaeque erat urbis imago.
femineo clamore sonat domus: ocius omnes surgimus, et primus 'quae te vecordia,' Theseus
'Euryte, pulsat,' ait, 'qui me vivente laciesas Pirithoum violesque duos ignarus in uno?'

[neve ea magnanimus frustra memoraverit ore, submovet instantes raptamque furentibus aufert.] ille nihil contra, (neque enim defendere verbis talia facta potest) sed vindicis ora protervis inesequitur manibus generosaque pectora pulsat.
forte fuit iuxta signis exstantibus asper antiquus crater; quem surgens vastior ipse sustulit Aegides adversaque misit in ora:
sanguinis ille globos pariter cerebrumque merumque vulnere et ore vomens madida resupinus harena calcitrat. ardescunt germani caede bimembres certatimque omnes uno ore 'arma, arma' loquuntur.
vina dabant animos, et prima pocula pugna missa volant fragilesque cadi curvique lebetes, res epulis quondam, tum bello et caedibus aptae.
lated Pirithoüs upon his bride, an act which all but undid the good omen of the wedding. For your heart, Eurytus, wildest of the wild centaurs, was inflamed as well by the sight of the maiden as with wine, and it was swayed by drunken passion redoubled by lust. Straightway the tables were overturned and the banquet in an uproar, and the bride was caught by her hair and dragged violently away. Eurytus caught up Hippodame, and others, each took one for himself according as he fancied or as he could, and the scene looked like the sacking of a town. The whole house resounded with the women’s shrieks. Quickly we all sprang up and Theseus first cried out: ‘What madness, Eurytus, drives you to this, that while I still live you dare provoke Pirithoüs and, not knowing what you do, attack two men in one?’ The great-souled hero, that he might justify his threat, thrust aside the opposing centaurs and rescued the ravished maid from their mad hands. The other made no reply, for with words he could not defend such deeds; but with unruly hands he rushed upon the avenger and beat upon his face and noble breast. There chanced to stand near by an antique mixing-vat, rough with high-wrought figures; this, Theseus, rising to his fullest height, himself caught up and hurled full into the other’s face. He, spouting forth gouts of blood along with brains and wine from wound and mouth alike, stumbled backward upon the reeking ground. His twi-formed brothers, inflamed with passion at his death, cried all with one accord, ‘To arms! to arms!’ vying with one another. Wine gave them courage, and in the first onslaught wine-cups and brittle flasks went flying through the air, and deep rounded basins, utensils once meant for use of feasting, but now for war and slaughter.
"Primus Ophionides Amycus penetralia donis 245 haut timuit spoliare suis et primus ab aede lampadibus densum rapuit funale coruscis elatumque alte, veluti qui candida tauri rumpere sacrificia molitur colla securi, inlisit fronti Lapithae Celadontis et ossa non cognoscendo confusa relinquit in ore. exsiluere oculi, disiectisque ossibus oris acta retro naris medioque est fixa palato. hunc pede convulso mensae Pellaeus acernae stravit humi Pelates deiecto in pectora mento cumque atro mixtos sputantem sanguine dentes vulnere Tartareas geminato mittit ad umbras. "Proximus ut steterat spectans altaria vultu fumida terribili 'cur non' ait 'utimur istis?' cumque suis Gryneus inmanem sustulit aram ignibus et medium Lapitharum iecit in agmen depressitque duos, Brotean et Orion: Orio mater erat Mycale, quam deduxisse canendo saepe reluctantis constabat cornua lunae. 'non impune feres, teli modo copia detur!' dixerat Exadius telique habet instar, in alta quae fuerant pinu votivi cornua cervi. figitur hinc duplici Gryneus in lumina ramo eruitque oculos, quorum pars cornibus haeret, pars fluit in barbam concretaque sanguine pendet. 270 "Ecce rapit mediis flagrantem Rhoetus ab aris pruniceum torrem dextraque a parte Charaxi tempora perstringit fulvo protecta capillo. correpti rapida, veluti seges arida, flamma “Then Gryneus, gazing with wild eyes upon the smoking altar near which he stood, cried out, ‘Why not use this?’ and, catching up the huge altar, fire and all, he hurled it amidst a throng of Lapithae and crushed down two, Brotesas and Orios. Now Orios’ mother was Mycale, who, men said, had by her incantations oft-times drawn down the horns of the moon, despite her struggles. ‘You shall not escape unscathed, if I may but lay hand upon a weapon.’ So cried Exadius, and found for weapon the antlers of a stag hung on a tall pine-tree as a votive offering. Gryneus’ eyes were pierced by the double branching horns and his eyeballs gouged out. One of these stuck to the horn and the other rolled down upon his beard and hung there in a mass of clotted blood.
“First Amycus, Ophion’s son, scrupled not to rob the inner sanctuary of its gifts, and first snatched from the shrine a chandelier thick hung with glittering lamps. This, lifted on high, as when one strives to break a bull’s white neck with sacrificial axe, he dashed full at the head of Celadon, one of the Lapithae, crushing his face past recognition. His eyes leaped from their sockets, the bones of his face were shattered, and his nose driven back and fastened in his throat. But Pelates of Pella, wrenching off the leg of a table of maple-wood, hurled Amycus to the ground, his chin driven into his breast; and, as he spat forth dark blood and teeth commingled, his enemy with a second blow dispatched him to the shades of Tartarus.

“Then Rhoetus caught up a blazing brand of plum-wood from the altar and, whirling it on the right, smashed through Charaxus’ temples covered with yellow hair. The hair, caught by the greedy flames, burned fiercely, like a dry field of grain, and the blood ars rerunt crines, et vulnere sanguis inustus terriblem stridore sonum dedit, ut dare ferrum ingne rubens plerumque solet, quod forcipe curva cum faber eduxit, lacubus demittit: at illud stridet et in tepida submersum sibilat unda.
saucius hirsutis avidum de crinibus ignem executit inque umeros limen tellure revulsum tollit, onus plaustri, quod ne permittat in hostem, ipsa facit gravitas: socium quoque saxe moles oppressit spatio stantem propiore Cometen.
gaedia nec retinet Rhoetus: 'sic, conprecor,' inquit
'cetera sit fortis castrorum turba tuorum!'

"Victor ad Euagrum Corythumque Dryantaque transit;
e quibus ut prima tectus lanugine malas procubuit Corythus, 'puero quae gloria fuso parta tibi est?' Euagrus ait, nec dicere Rhoetus plura sinit rutilasque ferox in aperta loquentis condidit ora viri perque os in pectora flamm.
te quoque, saeve Drya, circm caput igne rotato insequitur, sed non in te quoque constitit idem exitus: adsiduae successu caedis ovantem, qua iuncta est umero cervix, sude figis obusta.
ingemuit duroque sudem vix osse revulsit Rhoetus et ipse suo madefactus sanguine fugit.
fugit et Orneus Lycabasque et saucius armo scorching in the wound gave forth a horrid sizzling sound; such as a bar of iron, glowing red in the fire, gives when the smith takes it out in his bent pincers and plunges it into a tub of water; it sizzles and hisses as it is thrust into the tepid pool. The wounded man shook off the greedy fire from his shaggy locks, then tore up from the ground and heaved upon his shoulders a threshold-stone, a weight for a team of oxen. But its very weight prevented him from hurling it to reach his enemy. The massive stone, however, did reach Charaxus’ friend, Cometes, who stood a little nearer, and crushed him to the ground. At this Rhoetus could not contain his joy and said: ‘So, I pray, may the rest of the throng on your side be brave!’ and he redoubled his attack with the half-burned brand, and with heavy blows thrice and again he broke through the joinings of his skull until the bones sank down into his fluid brains.

“Then the victor next turned against Euagrus, Corythus, and Dryas. When one of these, young Corythus, whose first downy beard was just covering his cheeks, fell forward, Euagrus cried: ‘What glory do you get from slaying a mere boy?’ Rhoetus gave him no chance to say more, but fiercely thrust the red, flaming brand into the man’s mouth while still open in speech, and through his mouth clear down into his breast. You also, savage Dryas, he pursued, whirling the brand about his head; but his attack upon you did not have the same result. As he came on, rejoicing in his successive killings, with a charred stake you thrust him through where neck and shoulder join. Rhoetus groaned aloud, with a mighty effort wrenched the stake out from the hard bone, and then fled, reeking with his own blood. Orneus also fled and Lycabas and Medon, wounded in his right shoulder, dexteriore Medon et cum Pisenore Thaumas, quique pedum nuper certamine vicerat omnes Mermeros, accepto tum vulnere tardius ibat; et Pholus et Melaneus et Abas praedator aprorum, quique suis frustra bellum dissuaserat augur Asbolus: ille etiam metuenti vulnera Nesso 'ne fuge! ad Herculeos' inquit 'servaberis arcus.' at non Eurynomus Lycidasque et Areos et Imbreus effugere necem; quos omnes dextra Dryantis perculit adversos. adversum tu quoque, quamvis terga fugae dederas, vulnus, Crenaeæ, tulisti: nam grave respiciens inter duo lumina ferrum, qua naris fronti committitur, accipis, imae. "In tanto fremitu cunctis sine fine iacebat sopitus venis et inexperrectus Aphidas languentique manu carchesia mixta tenebat, fusus in Ossaeæ villosis pelibus ursae; quem procul ut vidit frustra nulla arma moventem, inserit amento digitos 'miscenda' que dixit 'cum Styge vina bibes' Phorbas; nec plura moratus in iuvenem torsit iaculum, ferrataque collo fraxinus, ut casu iacuit resupinus, adacta est. mors caruit sensu, plenoque e gutture fluxit inque toros inque ipsa niger carchesia sanguis. "Vidi ego Petraeum conantem tollere terra glandiferam quercum; quam dum complexibus ambit et quatit huc illuc labefactaque robora iactat, lancea Pirithoi costis inmissa Petraei pectora cum duro luctantia robore fixit.
and Thaumas and Pisenor; and Mermeros, who but lately had surpassed all in speed of foot, now fared more slowly because of the wound he had received; Pholus also fled and Melaneus and Abas, hunter of the boar, and Asbolus, the augur, who had in vain attempted to dissuade his friends from battle. He said to Nessus, who also fled with him in fear of wounds: 'Do not you flee; you will be reserved for the bow of Hercules.' But Eurynomus and Lycidas, Areos and Imbreus did not escape death; for all these the right hand of Dryas slew as they fought fronting him. In front you, also, Crenaeus, received your wound, although you had turned in flight; for, as you looked back, you received a heavy javelin between the eyes where nose and forehead join.

"Midst all this uproar Aphidas lay, buried in endless sleep which filled all his veins, unawakened, still holding his cup full of mixed wine in his sluggish hand and stretched at full length upon an Ossaean bear's shaggy skin. Him, all in vain striking no blow, Phorbas spied at a distance and, fitting his fingers in the thong of his javelin, cried out: 'Mingle your wine with the Styx and drink it there.' Straightway he hurled his javelin at the youth, and the iron-tipped ash was driven through his neck as he chanced to lie with head thrown back. He was not conscious of death, and from his full throat out upon the couch and into the very wine-cup the dark blood flowed.

"I saw Petraeus striving to tear from the earth an acorn-laden oak. While he held this in both his arms, bending it this way and that, and just as he was wrenching forth the loosened trunk, Pirithoös hurled a spear right through his ribs and pinned his writhing body to the hard oak. They say that Lycus
OVID

Pirithoi cecidisse Lycum virtute ferebant, Pirithoi virtute Chromin, sed uterque minorem victori titulum quam Dictys Helopsque dederunt, fixus Helops iaculo, quod pervia tempora fecit et missum a dextra laevam penetravit ad aurem, Dictys ab ancipti delapsus acumine montis, dum fugit instantem trepidans Ixione natum, decidit in praeceps et pondere corporis ornem ingentem fregit suaque induit ilia fractae. 330

"Ultor adest Aphareus saxumque e monte revulsum mittere conatur; mittentem stipite querno occupat Aegides cubitique ingentia frangit ossa nec ulterior dare corpus inutile leta aut vacat aut curat tergoque Bienoris alti insilis, haut solito quemquam portare nisi ipsum, opposuitque genu costis prensamque sinistra caesariem retinens vultum mimitantiaque ora robores nodoso praeduraque tempora fregit. robores Nedymnum iaculatoremque Lycopen sternit et inmissa protectum pectora barba Hippason et summis exstantem Riphea silvis Thereaque, Haemoniis qui prenos montibus ursos ferre domum vivos indignantesque solebat. haut tulit utentem pugnae successibus ultra Thesea Demoleon: solidum divellere dumo annosam pinum magnus molimine temptat; quod quia non potuit, praefractam misit in hostem, sed procul a telo Theseus veniente recessit Pallados admonitu: credi sic ipse volebat. 350

204
fell by the might of Pirithoüs; by the might of Pirithoüs, Chromis. But Dictys and Helops gave greater fame to the conqueror than either of these. Helops was thrust through by a javelin which passed through his temples and, hurled from the right, pierced to his left ear. Dictys, while fleeing in desperate haste from Ixion’s son who pressed him hard, stumbled on the edge of a steep precipice and, falling headlong, crashed into a huge ash-tree’s top with all his weight and impaled his body on the broken spikes.

"Aphareus, at hand to avenge him, essays to hurl a rock torn from the mountain-side; but, even as he hurled it, the son of Aegeus caught him with an oaken club and broke the great bones of his elbow-joint. Having no time nor care to inflict further injury on his maimed body, he sprang on tall Bienor’s back, that never before had carried any but himself; and, pressing his knees into the centaur’s sides and with his left hand clutching his flowing locks, he crushed face and mouth, screaming out threatenings, and hard temples with his knotty club. With the club he slew Nedymnus and Lycopcs, famed for the javelin throw, Hippasos, his breast covered by his flowing beard, and Ripheus, who overtopped the trees in height; Thereus as well, who used to catch bears upon the Thessalian mountains and carry them home alive and struggling. Demoleon could no longer brook Theseus’ unchecked success. He had been wrenching away with all his might at an old pine, trying to tear it up, trunk and all; failing in this, he broke it off and hurled it at his foe. But Theseus, seeing the weapon coming, withdrew beyond its range, for so had Pallas directed him; at least that is what he himself would have us understand.
OVID

non tamen arbor iners cecidit; nam Crantoris alti abscidit iugulo pectusque umerumque sinistrum:
armiger ille tui fuerat genitoriis, Achille, quam Dolopum rector, bello superatus, Amyntor Aeacidae dederat pacis pignusque fideoque.

Hunc procul ut foedo disiectum vulnere Peleus vidit, 'at inferias, iuvenum gratissime Crantor, accipe' ait validoque in Demoleonta lacerto fraxineam misit, mentis quoque viribus, hastam, quae laterum cratem praerupit et ossibus haerens intremuit: trahit ille manu sine cuspide lignum (id quoque vix sequitur), cuspis pulmone retenta est; ipse dolor vires animo dabat: aeger in hostem erigitur pedibusque virum proculcat equinis.
excipit ille ictus galea clipeoque sonanti defensatque umeros praetentaque sustinet arma perque armos uno duo pectora perforat ictu.
ante tamen leto dederat Phlegraeon et Hylen eminus, Iphinoum conlato Marte Claninque; additur his Dorylas, qui tempora tecta gerebat pelle lupi saevique vicem praestantia teli cornua vara boum multo rubefacta cruore.

"Huic ego (nam viris animus dabat) 'aspice,' dixi
'quantum concedant nostro tua cornua ferro' et iaculum torci: quod cum vitare nequiret, opposuit dextram passurae vulnera fronti:
adfixa est cum fronte manus; fit clamor, at illum
But the tree-trunk did not fall without effect, for it shore off tall Crantor's breast and left shoulder from the neck. He had been your father's armour-bearer, Achilles, whom Amyntor, king of the Dolopians, when overcome in war had given to Aeacides as a faithful pledge of peace. When Peleus at some space away saw him so horribly dismembered, he cried: 'At least receive a funeral offering, Crantor, dearest of youths.' So saying, with his sturdy arm and with all his might of soul as well, he hurled his ashen spear at Demoleon; and this burst through his framework of ribs and hung there quivering in the bones. Without the head the centaur wrenched out the wooden shaft (even the shaft scarce yields); the head stuck fast within his lungs. His very anguish gave him frantic courage: wounded as he was, he reared up against his foe and beat the hero down with his hoofs. But Peleus received the blows on helm and resounding shield and, while protecting himself, he held his own weapon ready. With this he thrust the centaur through the shoulder, with one blow piercing his two breasts. Before this encounter Peleus had already slain Phlegraeos and Hyles, hurling from a distance, and, in close conflict, Iphinoës and Clanis. To these he now added Dorylas, who wore a cap of wolf's hide on his head and, in place of deadly spear, a notable pair of curving bull's horns, reeking red with blood.

"To him (for my courage gave me strength) I cried: 'See now how little your horns avail against my spear'; and I hurled the spear. Since he could not dodge this, he threw up his right hand to protect his forehead from the wound. And there his hand was pinned against his forehead. A mighty shout

1 i.e., where horse-form and man-form meet.
OVID

haerentem Peleus et acerbo vulnere victum (stabat enim propior) medium ferit ense sub alvum.
prosiluit terraque ferox sua visera traxit 390 tractaque calcavit calcataque rupit et illis crura quoque impediit et inani concidit alvo.

"Nec te pugnantem tua, Cyllare, forma redemit, si modo naturae formam concedimus illi.
barba erat incipiens, barbae color aureus, aurea 395
ex umeris medios coma dependebat in armos.
gratus in ore vigor; cervix umerique manusque pectoraque artificum laudatis proxima signis, et quacumque vir est; nec equi mendosa sub illo deteriorque viro facies; da colla caputque, Castore dignus erit: sic tergum sessile, sic sunt pectora celsa toris. totus pice nigror atra, candida cauda tamen; color est quoque cruribus albus.
multae illum petiere sua de gente, sed una abstulit Hylonome, qua nulla decentior inter 400 semiferos altis habitavit femina silvis;
haec et blanditiis et amando et amare fatendo Cyllaron una tenet, cultu quoque, quantus in illis esse potest membris, ut sit comma pectine levis, ut modo rore maris, modo se violave rosave 410 implicet, interdum candentia lilia gestet, bisque die lapsis Pagasaeae vertice silvae fontibus ora lavet, bis flumine corpora tinguat, nec nisi quae deceant electarumque ferarum aut umero aut lateri praetendat vellera laevo. 415 208
arose, but Peleus, for he was near him, while the centaur stood pinned and helpless with that sore wound, smote him with his sword full in the belly. He leaped fiercely forward, trailing his entrails on the ground; and as he trailed he trod upon them and burst them as he trod, tangled his legs in them, and fell with empty belly to the earth.

"But your beauty, Cyllarus, did not save you from death in that great fight, if indeed we grant beauty to your tribe. His beard was just in its first growth, a golden beard, and golden locks fell down from his neck upon his shoulders. He had a pleasing sprightliness of face; and his neck, shoulders, breast, and hands, and all his human parts you would praise as equal to an artist's perfect work. His equine part, too, was without blemish, no way less perfect than his human part. Give him but neck and head, and he will be worthy of Castor's use: so shaped for the seat his back, so bold stood out the muscles on his deep chest. All blacker than pitch he was; yet his tail was white; his legs also were snowy white. Many females of his own kind sought him, but Hylonome alone had won him, than whom there was no other centaur-maid more comely in all the forest depths. She, by her coaxing ways, by loving and confessing love, alone possessed Cyllarus; and by her toilet, too, so far as such a thing was possible to such a form; for now she smoothed her long locks with a comb, now twined rosemary, now violets or roses in her hair, and sometimes she wore white lilies. Twice each day she bathed her face in the brook that fell down from a wooded height by Pagasa, and twice dipped her body in the stream. Nor would she wear on shoulder or left side aught but becoming garments, skins of well-chosen beasts. They both felt equal love.
par amor est illis: errant in montibus una, antra simul subeunt; et tum Lapitheia tecta intrarant pariter, pariter fera bella gerebant: (auctor in incerto est) iaculum de parte sinistra venit et inferius, quam collo pectora subsunt, Cyllare, te fixit; parvo cor vulnere laesum corpore cum toto post tela educta refrixit. protinus Hylonome morientes excipit artus inpositaque manu vulnus fovet oraque ad ora admovet atque animae fugienti obsistere temptat; ut videt exstinctum, dictis, quae clamor ad aurcs arcuit ire meas, telo, quod inhaeserat illi, incubuit moriensque suum conplexa maritum est.

"Ante oculos stat et ille meos, qui sena leonum vinxerat inter se conexis vellera nodis, Phaeocomes, hominemque simul protectus equumque; codice qui misso, quem vix iuga bina moverent, Tectaphon Oleniden a summO vertice fregit; fracta volubilitas capitis latissima, perque os perque cavas nares oculosque auresque cerebrum molle fluit, veluti concretum vime querno lac solet utve liquor rari sub pondere cribri manat et exprimitur per densa foramina spissus. ast ego, dum parat hic armis nudare iacentem, (scit tuus hoc genitor) gladium spoliantis in ima ilia demisi. Chthonius quoque Teleboasque ense iacent nostro: ramum prior ille bifureum Together they would wander on the mountain-sides, together rest within the caves. On this occasion also they had come together to the palace of the Lapithae, and were waging fierce battle side by side. Thrown from an unknown hand, a javelin came from the left and pierced you, Cyllarus, below where the chest rises to the neck. The heart, though but slightly wounded, grew cold and the whole body also after the weapon had been drawn out. Straightway Hylonome embraced the dying body, fondled the wound with her hand and, placing her lips upon his lips, strove to hold from its passing the dying breath. But when she saw that he was dead, with some words which the surrounding uproar prevented me from hearing, she threw herself upon the spear which had pierced Cyllarus and fell in a dying embrace upon her lover.

"Still there stands clear before my eyes one who had with knotted thongs bound together six lion-hides, Phaeocomes, thus protecting both man and horse. Hurling a log which two yokes of cattle could scarce move, he struck Tectaphos, the son of Olenus, a crushing blow upon the head. The broad dome of his head was shattered, and through his mouth, through hollow nostrils, eyes, and ears oozed the soft brains, as when curdled milk drips through oaken withes,¹ or a thick liquid mass trickles through a coarse sieve weighted down, and is squeezed out through the crowded apertures. But I, even as he made ready to spoil his fallen victim—your father can testify to this—thrust my sword deep into the spoiler’s groin. Chthonius also and Teleboas fell by my sword. The one had carried a forked stick as ¹ Referring to the process of straining curds in cheese-making.

OVID

gesserat, hic iaculum; iaculo mihi vulnera fecit: signa vides! adparet adhuc vetus inde cicatrix. tum poteram magni, si non superare, morari Hectoris arma meis! illo sed tempore nullus, aut puer, Hector erat, nunc me mea defect aetas. quid tibi victorem gemini Periphanta Pyraethi, Ampyca quid referam, qui quadrupedantis Ehecli fixit in adverso cornum sine cuspide vultu?

turn poteram magni, si non superare, morari Hectoris arma meis! illo sed tempore nullus, aut puer, Hector erat, nunc me mea defect aetas.

"Quinque neci Caeneus dederat Styphelumque Bromumque Antimachumque Elymumque securiferumque Pyramon:

vulnera non memini, numerum nomenque notavi. provolat Emathii spoliis armatus Halesi, quem dederat leto, membris et corpore Latreus maximus: huic aetas inter iuvenemque senemque, vis iuvenalis erat, variabant tempora cani.

qui clipeo gladioque Macedoniaque sarisa conspicuus faciemque obversus in agmen utrumque armaque concussit certumque equitavit in orbem weapon; the other had a spear, and with this spear he gave me a wound—you see the mark!—the old scar is still visible. Those were the days when I should have been sent to capture Pergama; then with my arms I could have checked, if not surpassed, the arms of Hector. But at that time mighty Hector was either not yet born or was but a little boy; and now old age has sapped my strength. What need to tell you how Periphas overcame the double-formed Pyraethus? Why tell of Ampyx, who with a pointless shaft thrust through the opposing front of the four-footed Echeclus? Macareus hurled a crow-bar at the breast of Pelethronian Erigdupus and laid him low. And I remember also how a hunting spear, thrown by the hand of Nessus, was buried in the groin of Cymelus. Nor must you deem that Mopsus, the son of Ampycus, was only a seer telling what was to come; for by Mopsus’ weapon the two-formed Hodites fell, striving in vain to speak, for his tongue had been pinned to his chin and his chin to his throat.

“Caeneus had already put five to death: Styphelus and Bromus, Antimachus and Elymus and Pyracmos, armed with a battle-axe. I do not remember their wounds, but their number and names I marked well. Then forth rushed one, armed with the spoils of Emathian Halesus whom he had slain, Latreus, of enormous bulk of limb and body. His years were midway between youth and age, but his strength was youthful. Upon his temples his hair was turning grey. Conspicuous for his shield and sword and Macedonian lance, and facing either host in turn, he clashed his arms and rode round in a circle, insolently...

1 He did indeed have prophetic powers, but here he is pictured as a mighty warrior.
verbaque tot fudit vacuas animosus in auras:
'et te, Caeni, feram? nam tu mihi femina semper, tu mihi Caenis eris. nec te natalis origo commonuit, mentemque subit, quo praemia facto quaque viri falsam speciem mercede parasti?
vel quid nata, vide, vel quid sis passa, columque,
i, cape cum calathis et stamina pollice torque;
bella relinque viris.' iactanti talia Caeneus extentum cursu missa latus eruit hasta, qua vir equo commissus erat. furit ille dolore nudaque Phyllei iuvenis ferit ora sarisa:
non secus haec resilit, quam tecti a culmine grando, aut siquis parvo feriat cava tympana saxo.
comminus adgreditur laterique recondere duro luctatur gladium: gladio loca pervia non sunt.
'haut tamen effugies! medio iugulaberis ense, quandoquidem muro est hebes' inquit et in latus ensemble
obliquat longaque amplexit tur ilia dextra.
plaga facit gemitus in corpore marmoris icti, fractaque dissiluit percutso lammina callo.
ut satis inlaesos miranti prae semt artus,
'nunc age' ait Caeneus 'nosto tua corpora ferro temptemus!' capuloque tenus demisit in armos ensemble fatiferum caecumque in viscera movit versavitque manu vulnusque in vulnere fecit.
ecce ruunt vasto rabidi clamore bimembres telaque in hunc omnes unum mittuntque feruntque.
tela retusa cadunt: manet imperfossus ab omni inque cruentatus Caeneus Elateius ictu.

OVID

214
pouring out many boasts on the empty air: 'You too, Caenis, shall I brook? For woman shall you always be to me, Caenis shall you be. Does not your birth remind you, do you not remember for what act you were rewarded, at what price you gained this false appearance of a man? Heed well what you were born or what you have endured. Go then, take distaff and wool-basket and twist the spun thread with practised thumb; but leave wars to men.' As he thus boasted, Caeneus, hurling his spear, plowed up the centaur's side stretched in the act of running, just where man and horse were joined. Mad with the pain, the other smote the Phyleian youth full in the naked face with his long lance; but this leaped back again like a hailstone from a roof, or a pebble from a hollow drum. Then he closed up and strove to thrust his sword in his unyielding side. The sword found no place of entrance. 'But you shall not escape! with the sword's edge I'll slay you, though its point be blunt,' the centaur cried; then turned his sword edgewise and reached with his long right arm for his foeman's loins; the blow resounded on the flesh as if on stricken marble, and the blade, striking the hardened skin, broke into pieces. When long enough he had stood unharmed before his amazed enemy, Caeneus exclaimed: 'Come now, let me try your body with my steel!' and clear to the hilt he drove his deadly sword in the other's side, and there in his vitals twisted and turned the buried weapon, inflict ing wound within wound. Now, quite beside themselves, the double monsters rushed on with huge uproar, and all together against that single foe they aimed and drove their weapons. The spears fell blunted, and Caeneus, the son of Elatus, still stood, for all their strokes, unwounded and unstained. The fecerat attonitos nova res. ' heu dedecus ingens!' Monychus ex clamat. ' populus superamur ab uno 499 vixque viro; quamquam ille vir est, nos segnibus actis, quod fuit ille, sumus. quid membra inmania prosunt? quid geminae vires et quod fortissima rerum in nobis duplex natura animalia iunxit? nec nos matre dea, nec nos Ixione natos esse reor, qui tantus erat, Iunonis ut altae 505 spem caperet: nos semimari superamur ab hoste! saxa trabesque super totosque involvite montes vivacemque animam missis elidite silvis! silva premat fauces, et erit pro vulnere pondus.' dixit et insanis deiectam viribus austri 510 forte trabem nactus validum coniecit in hostem exemplumque fuit, parvoque in tempore nudus arboris Othrys erat, nec habebat Pelion umbras. obrutus inmani cumulo sub pondere Caeneus aestuat arboreo congestaque robora duris 515 fert umeris, sed enim postquam super ora caputque crevit onus neque habet, quas ducat, spiritus auras, deficit interdum, modo se super aera frustra tollere conatur iactasque evolvere silvas interdumque movet, veluti, quam cernimus, ecce, 520 ardua si terrae quatiatur motibus Ide. exitus in dubio est: alii sub inania corpus Tartara detrusum silvarum mole fercbant; abnuit Ampycides medioque ex aggere fulvis vidit avem pennis liquidas exire sub auras, 525 quae mihi tum primum, tunc est conspecta supremum. hanc ubi lustrantem leni sua castra volatu strange sight struck them speechless. Then Monychus exclaimed: 'Oh, what a shame is this! We, a whole people, are defied by one, and he scarcely a man. And yet he is the man, while we, with our weak attempts, are what he was before. Of what advantage are our monster-forms? What our two-fold strength? What avails it that a double nature has united in our bodies the strongest living things? We are not sons of any goddess nor Ixion's sons, I think. For he was high-souled enough to aspire to be great Juno's mate, while we are conquered by an enemy but half-man! Come then, let us heap stones and tree-trunks on him, mountains at a time! let's crush his stubborn life out with forests for our missiles! Let forests smother his throat, and for wounds let weight suffice.' He spoke and, chancing on a tree-trunk overthrown by mad Auster's might, he hurled it at his sturdy foe. The others followed him; and in short time Othrys was stripped of trees and Pelion had lost his shade. Buried beneath that huge mound, Caeneus heaved against the weight of trees and bore up the oaken mass upon his sturdy shoulders. But indeed, as the burden mounted over lips and head, he could get no air to breathe. Gasping for breath, at times he strove in vain to lift his head into the air and to throw off the heaped-up forest; at times he moved, just as if lofty Ida, which we see yonder, should tremble with an earthquake. His end is doubtful. Some said that his body was thrust down by the weight of woods to the Tartarean pit; but the son of Ampycus denied this. For from the middle of the pile he saw a bird with golden wings fly up into the limpid air. I saw it too, then for the first time and the last. As Mopsus watched him circling round his camp in easy flight Mopsus et ingenti circum clangore sonantem adspexit pariterque animis oculisque secutus 'o salve,' dixit 'Lapithaeae gloria gentis, maxime vir quondam, sed nunc avis unica, Caeneus' credita res auctore suo est: dolor addidit iram, oppressumque aegre tulimus tot ab hostibus unum; nec prius abstitimus ferro exercere dolorem, quam data pars leto, partem fuga noxque removit.'

Haec inter Lapithas et semihomines Centauros proelia Tlepolemus Pylio referente dolorem praeteriti Alcidae tacito non pertulit ore atque ait: "Herculeae mirum est oblivia laudis acta tibi, senior; certe mihi saepe referre nubigenas domitos a se pater esse solebat." tristis ad haec Pylius: "quid me meminisse malorum cogis et obductos annis rescindere luctus inque tuum genitorem odium offensasque fateri? ille quidem maior fide, di! gessit et orbem inplevit meritis, quod mallem posse negare; sed neque Deiphobum nec Polydamanta nec ipsum Hectora laudamus: quis enim laudaverit hostem? ille tuus genitor Messenia moenia quondam stravit et inmeritas urbes Elimque Pylumque diruit inque meos ferrum flammamque penatis inpulit, utque alios taceam, quos ille peremit, bis sex Nelidae fuimus, conspecta iuventus, bis sex Herculeis ceciderunt me minus uno viribus; atque alios vinci potuisse ferendum est: mira Periclymeni mors est, cui posse figuras sumere, quas vellet, rursusque reponere sumptas.
and heard the loud clangour of his wings, he followed him both with soul and eyes and cried: 'All hail, Caeneus, thou glory of the Lapithaean race, once most mighty hero, now sole bird of thy kind!' This story was believed because of him who told it. Then grief increased our wrath and we were indignant that one man should be overwhelmed by so many foes. Nor did we cease to ply sword on behalf of our mad grief till half our foes were slain and flight and darkness saved all the rest."

As Pylian Nestor told this tale of strife betwixt the Lapithae and half-human Centaurs, Tlepolemus could not restrain his resentment that Alcides had been passed by without a word, and said: "Old sir, 'tis strange that you have forgotten to speak in praise of Hercules; for surely my father used often to tell me of the cloud-born creatures he had overcome." And sternly the Pylian answered him: "Why do you force me to remember wrongs, to reopen a grief that was buried by the lapse of years, and to rehearse the injuries that make me hate your father? He has done deeds beyond belief, Heaven knows! and filled the earth with well-earned praise, which I would gladly deny him if I could. But neither Deiphobus nor Polydamas nor even Hector do we praise; for who cares to praise his enemy? That sire of yours once laid low Messene's walls, brought undeserved destruction upon Elis and Pylos, and devastated my own home with fire and sword. To say nothing of the others whom he slew, there were twelve of us sons of Neleus, a noble band of youths; and all twelve, save me alone, fell by Hercules' might. That others could be conquered must be borne; but strange was the death of Periclymenus; for to him

See Index s.v. "Centaurs." Neptunus dederat, Nelei sanguinis auctor.
hic ubi nequiquam est formas variatus in omnes, vertitur in faciem volucris, quae fulmina curvis ferre solet pedibus divum gratissima regi;
viribus usus avis pennis rostroque redunco hamatisque viri laniaverat unguibus ora.
tendit in hanc nimium certos Tirynthius arcus atque inter nubes sublimia membra ferentem pendentemque ferit, lateri qua iungitur ala; nec grave vulnus erat, sed rupti vulnere nervi deficient motumque negant viresque volandi.
decidit in terram, non concipientibus auras infirmis pennis, et qua levis haeserat alae corporis adfixi pressa est gravitate sagitta perque latus summum iugulo est exacta sinistro nunc videor debere tui praeconia rebus Herculis, o Rhodiae ductor pulcherrime classis?
nec tamen ulterius, quam fortia facta silendo ulciscor fratres: solida est mihi gratia tecum.” Haec postquam dulci Neleius edidit ore, a sermone senis repetito munere Bacchi surrexere toris: nox est data cetera somno.
At deus, aequoreas qui cuspide temperat undas, in volucrem corpus nati Phaethontida versum mente dolet patria saevumque perosus Achillem exercet memores plus quam civiliter iras.
iamque fere tracto duo per quinquennia bello Neptune, father of Neleus, had given power to assume any form he pleased and to put it off again at will. When now he had vainly changed to each of his forms in turn, he took the form of the bird which carries the thunderbolts in his hooked talons, a bird most dear to the king of the gods. With all his might of wings, of curved beak and hooked claws, he had torn the hero's face. Then the Tirynthian aimed his too unerring bow at him as he bore his body high into the clouds and hung poised there, and smote him where wing joins side. The wound was not severe; but the sinews severed by the wound failed of their office and refused motion and power of flight. Down to the earth he fell, his weakened wings no longer catching the air; and the arrow, where it had lightly pierced the wing, pressed by the weight of the body in which it hung, was driven clear through the upper breast from the left side into the throat. And now, O fairest leader of the Rhodian fleet, what cause have I, think you, to sing the praises of your Hercules? Yet for my brothers I seek no other vengeance than to ignore his mighty deeds. 'Twixt me and you there is unbroken amity."

When Nestor with sweet speech had told this tale, at the conclusion of the old man's words the wine-cup went around once more and they rose from the couches. The remainder of the night was given to sleep.

But the god who rules the waters of the sea with his trident was still filled with a father's grief for his son whose body he had changed into the bird of Phaëthon. And, hating the murderous Achilles, he indulged his unforgetting wrath excessively. And

1 The swan. See Index s.v. "Phaëthon."
OVID

talibus intonsum compellat Sminthea dictis:
"o mihi de fratribus longe gratissime natis, inrita qui mecum posuisti moenia Troiae, ecquid, ubi has iamiam casuras adspicies arces, ingemis? aut ecquid tot defendentia muros milia caesa doles? ecquid, ne persequar omnes, Hectoris umbra subit circum sua Pergama tracti?
cum tamen ille ferox belloque cruentior ipso vivit adhuc, operis nostri populator, Achilles.
det mihi se: faxo, triplici quid cuspide possim, sentiat; at quoniam concurrere comminus hosti non datur, occulta necopinum perde sagitta!"

adnuit atque animo pariter patruique suoque Delius indulgens nebula velatus in agmen pervenit Iliacum mediaque in caede virorum rara per ignotos spargentem cernit Achivos tela Parin fassusque deum, "quid spicula perdis sanguine plebis?" ait. "sique est tibi cura tuorum, vertere in Aeaciden caesosque ulciscere fratres!"

dixit et ostendens sternentem Troica ferro corpora Peliden, arcus obvertit in illum certaque letifera direxit spicula dextra.
quod Priamus gaudere senex post Hectora posset, hoc fuit; ille igitur tantorum victor, Achille, victus es a timido Graiae raptore maritae!
at si femineo fuerat tibi Marte cadendum, Thermodontiaca malles cecidisse bipenni.
now for nigh ten years the war had been prolonged, when he thus addressed Sminthean Apollo of the unshorn locks: "O thou, by far the best beloved of my brother's sons, thou who with me (though vainly) didst build the walls of Troy, dost thou not groan at sight of these battlements so soon to fall? Dost thou not grieve that so many thousands have been slain in defending these walls? Not to name them all, does not Hector's image come before thee, dragged around his own Pergama? But Achilles, fierce and more cruel than war itself, still lives, the destroyer of our handiwork. Let him but come within my reach. I'll make him feel what I can do with my three-forked spear. But since it is not granted me to meet my enemy face to face, do thou bring him to sudden death by thy unseen arrow!"

The Delian nodded assent and, indulging equally his own and his uncle's desire, wrapped in a cloud came to the Trojan lines. There midst the bloody strife of heroes he saw Paris taking infrequent shots at the nameless crowd. Revealing his divinity, he said: "Why do you waste your arrows in killing common folk? If you would serve your people, aim at Aeacides and avenge your slaughtered brothers!"

He spoke and, pointing where Pelides was working havoc on the Trojans with his spear, he turned the bow in his direction and guided the well-aimed shaft with his death-dealing hand. This was the first cause for joy which old Priam had since Hector's death. So then, Achilles, thou conqueror of the mightiest, thou art thyself o'ercome by the cowardly ravisher of a Grecian's wife! But if thou hadst been fated to fall by a woman's battle-stroke, how gladly wouldst thou have fallen by the Amazon's double axe!
Iam timor ille Phrygum, decus et tutela Pelasgi nominis, Aeacides, caput insuperabile bello, arserat: armarat deus idem idemque cremarat; iam cinis est, et de tam magno restat Achille nescio quid parvum, quod non bene conpleat urnam, at vivit totum quae gloria conpleat orbem. haec illi mensura viro respondet, et haec est par sibi Pelides nec inania Tartara sentit. ipse etiam, ut, cuius fuerit, cognoscere possis, bella movet clipeus, deque armis arma feruntur. non ea Tydides, non audet Oileos Aiax, non minor Atrides, non bello maior et aevo poscere, non alii: solis Telamone creato Laerteque fuit tantae fiducia laudis. a se Tantalides onus invidiamque removit Argolicosque duces mediis considere castris iussit et arbitrium litis traecit in omnes.
METAMORPHOSES BOOK XII

And now that terror of the Phrygians, that ornament and bulwark of the Pelasgian name, Aeacides, the invincible captain of the war, was burned. One and the same god armed him and consumed him too. Now he is but dust; and of Achilles, once so great, there remains a pitiful handful, hardly enough to fill an urn. But his glory lives, enough to fill the whole round world. This is the true measure of the man; and in this the son of Peleus is still his real self, and does not know empty Tartarus. His very shield, that you might know to whom it once belonged, still wages war, and for his arms arms are taken up. Neither Tydides nor Ajax, Oileus’ son, dares to claim them, nor the lesser¹ Atrides, nor the greater² in prowess and in age, nor other chieftains. Only the son³ of Telamon and Laërtes’ son⁴ were bold enough to claim so great a prize. To escape the hateful burden of a choice between them, Tantalides⁵ bade the Grecian captains assemble in the midst of the camp, and he referred to all the decision of the strife.

¹ Menelaüs ² Agamemnon. ³ Telamon. ⁴ Ulysses. ⁵ Ajax.
LIBER XIII

Consedere duces et vulgi stante corona surgit ad hos clipei dominus septiclipes Aiax, utque erat inpatiens irae, Sigeia torvo litora resspexit classemque in litore vultu intendensque manus "agimus, pro Iuppiter!" inquit "ante rates causam, et mecum confertur Ulixes!

at non Hectoreis dubitavit cedere flammis, quas ego sustinui, quas hae a classe fugavi. tutius est igitur fictis contendere verbis, quam pugnare manu, sed nec mihi dicere promptum, nec facere est isti: quantumque ego Marte feroci inque acie valeo, tantum valet iste loquendo. nec memoranda tamen vobis mea facta, Pelasgi, esse reor: vidistis enim; sua narret Ulixes, quae sine teste gerit, quorum nox conscia sola est' praemia magna peti fateror; sed demit honorem aemulus: Aiaci non est tenuisse superbum, sit licet hoc ingens, quicquid speravit Ulixes; iste tulit pretium iam nunc temptaminis huius, quod, cum victus erit, mecum certasse feretur.

"Atque ego, si virtus in me dubitabilis esset, nobilitate potens essem, Telamone creatus, moenia qui forti Troiana sub Hercule cepit litoraque intravit Pagasaeea Colcha carina;
BOOK XIII

The chiefs took their seats, while the commons stood in a ring about them. Then up rose Ajax, lord of the sevenfold shield. With uncontrolled indignation he let his lowering gaze rest awhile on the Sigean shores and on the fleet; then, pointing to these, "By Jupiter!" he cried, "in the presence of these ships I plead my cause, and my competitor is—Ulysses! But he did not hesitate to give way before Hector's torches, which I withstood, nay, which I drove away from this fleet. 'Tis safer, then, to fight with lying words than with hands. But I am not prompt to speak, as he is not to act; and I am as much his master in the fierce conflict of the battle-line as he is mine in talk. As for my deeds, O Greeks, I do not think I need rehearse them to you, for you have seen them. Let Ulysses tell of his, done without witness, done with the might alone to see them! I own that it is a mighty prize I strive for; but such a rival takes away the honour of it. It is no honour for Ajax to have gained a prize, however great, to which Ulysses has aspired. Already he has gained reward enough in this contest because, when conquered, he still can say he strove with me.

"And even if my valour were in doubt, I should still be his superior in birth; for Telamon was my father, who in company with valiant Hercules took the walls of Troy and with the Pagasaean ship sailed to Colchis."
OVID

Aeacus huic pater est, qui iura silentibus illie reddit, ubi Aeoliden saxum grave Sisyphon urget; Aeacon agnoscit summus prolemque fatetur Iuppiter esse suam: sic ab Iove tertius Aiax. nec tamen haec series in causam prosit, Achivi, si mihi cum magno non est communis Achille: frater erat, fraterna peto! quid sanguine cretus Sisyphio furtisque et fraude simillimus illi inseris Aeacidis alienae nomina gentis?

"An quod in arma prior nulloque sub indice veni, arma neganda mihi, potiorque videbitur ille, ultima qui cepit detractavitque furore militiam facto, donec sollertior isto, sed sibi inutilior timidi commenta retexit Naupliades animi vitataque traxit ad arma? optima num sumat, quia sumere noluitulla: nos inhonorati et donis patruelibus orbi, obtulimus quia nos ad prima pericula, simus?

"Atque utinam aut verus furor ille, aut creditus esset, nec comes hic Phrygias umquam venisset ad arces hortator scelerum! non te, Poeantia proles, expositum Lemnos nostro cum crimen haberet: qui nunc, ut memorant, silvestribus abditus antris saxa moves gemitu Laertiadæque precaris, quae meruit, quae, si di sunt, non vana precaris. et nunc ille eadem nobis iuratus in arma, heu! pars una ducum, quo successor sagittae Herculis utuntur, fractus morboque fameque velaturque aliturque avibus, volucresque petendo
His father was Aeacus, who is passing judgment in that silent world where Sisyphus Aeolides strains to his heavy stone; and most high Jupiter acknowledges Aeacus as his son. Thus Ajax is the third remove from Jove. But let this descent be of no avail to my cause, O Greeks, if I do not share it with the great Achilles. He was my cousin; a cousin's arms I seek. Why do you, the son of Sisyphus, exactly like him in his tricks and fraud, seek to associate the Aeacidae with the name of an alien family?

"Aye, is it because I came first to arms needing no detection, that arms are denied me? And shall he appear the better man who came last to arms and by feigned madness shirked the war, till one more shrewd than he, but not to his own advantage, the son of Nauplius, uncovered this timid fellow's trick and dragged him forth to the arms that he shunned? Shall he take the best because he wanted to take none? And shall I go unhonoured, denied my cousin's gifts, just because I was the first to front the danger?

"And oh, that his madness either had been real, or had never been detected, and that this criminal had never come with us against the Phrygians! Then, son of Poeas, Lemnos would not possess you, landed there to our sin and shame, you who, they say, hidden in forest lairs, move the very rocks with your groans and call down curses on Laëretes' son which he has richly merited, and which, if there are any gods, you do not call down in vain. And now he, who took oath with us for this same war, alas! one of our chieftains, who fell heir to Alcides' shafts, now, broken with disease and hunger, is clothed and fed by the birds, and in pursuit of birds uses those arrows which fate intended

1 Referring to Palamedes, who had exposed Ulysses' feigned madness and brought him to the war. See Index.
debita Troianis exercet spicula fatis.
ille tamen vivit, quia non comitavit Ulixen; 55 mallet et infelix Palamedes esse relictus:
viveret aut certe letum sine crimine haberet;
quem male convicti nimium memor iste furoris prodere rem Danaam finxit fictumque probavit crimen et ostendit, quod iam praefoderat, aurum. 60 ergo aut exilio vires subduxit Achivis, aut nece: sic pugnat, sic est metuendus Ulixes!

"Qui licet eloquio fidum quoque Nestora vincat, haut tamen efficet, desertum ut Nestora crimen esse rear nullum; qui cum inploraret Ulixen 65 vulnere tardus equi fessusque senilibus annis, proditus a socio est; non haec mihi crimina fingi scit bene Tydides, qui nomine saepe vocatum corripuit trepidoque fugam exprobravit amico.
aspiciunt oculis superi mortalia iustis!
en eget auxilio, qui non tuli, utque reliquit, sic linquendus erat: legem sibi dixerat ipse.
conclamat socios: adsum videoque trementem pallentemque metu et trepidantem morte futura; opposui molem clipei texique iacentem 75 servavique animam (minimum est hoc laudis) inertem.
si perstas certare, locum redeamus in illum:
reddo hostem vulnerasque tuum solitumque timorem post clipeumque late et mecum contende sub illo!
at postquam eripui, cui standi vulnera vires 80 non dederant, nullo tardatus vulnera fugit

232
for Troy! But yet he lives at least, because he did not keep on with Ulysses. Ill-fated Palamedes, too, would prefer to have been left behind. He would be living still, or at least would have died without dishonour, whom that fellow there, all too mindful of the unfortunate exposure of his madness, charged with betraying the Greek cause, and in proof of his false charge showed the gold which he had already hidden there. So then, either by exile or by death he has been drawing off the Grecian strength. So does Ulysses fight, so must he be feared!

"Though he should surpass even trusty Nestor in his eloquence, he will never make me believe that his desertion of Nestor was other than a crime. For when he, slow from his horse's wound and spent with extreme age, appealed to Ulysses, he was deserted by his friend. And that I am not making up this tale Tydides knows full well, for he repeatedly called upon him by name and chided his timid friend for flight. But the gods regard the affairs of men with righteous eyes. Behold he is in need of aid who rendered none; and as he left another, so was he fated to be left. He had established his own precedent. He cried aloud upon his friends. I came and saw him trembling, pale with fear, shrinking from impending death I thrust forward my massive shield and covered him where he lay, and I saved his worthless life—small praise in that. If you persist in this contention let us go back to that spot; bring back the enemy, your wound and your accustomed fear; hide behind my shield and contend with me beneath it. But after I rescued him, he, who because of his wounds had had no strength to stand, now fled away not hindered by his wounds at all!"
"Hector adest secumque deos in proelia ducit, quaque ruit, non tu tantum terreris, Ulixe, sed fortes etiam: tantum trahit ille timoris, hunc ego sanguineae successu caedis ovantem eminus ingenti resupinum pondere fudi, hunc ego poscentem, cum quo concurreret, unus sustinui: sortemque meam vovistis, Achivi, et vestrae valuerre preces. si quaeritis huius fortunam pugnae, non sum superatus ab illo. ecce ferunt Troes ferrumque ignesque Iovemque in Danaas classes: ubi nunc facundus Ulixes? nempe ego mille meo protexi pectore puppes, spem vestri reditus: date pro tot navibus arma. "Quodsi vera licet mihi dicere, quaeritur istis quam mihi maior honos, coniunctaque gloria nostra est, atque Aiax armis, non Aiaci arma petuntur, conferat his Ithacus Rhesum inbellemque Dolona Priamidenque Helenum rapta cum Pallade captum: luce nihil gestum, nihil est Diomede remoto; si semel ista datis meritis tam vilibus arma, dividite, et pars sit maior Diomedis in illis. "Quo tamen haec Ithaco, qui clam, qui semper inermis rem gerit et furtis incautum decipit hostem? ipse nitor galeae claro radiantis ab auro insidias prodet manifestabitque latentem; sed neque Dulichius sub Achillis casside vertex pondera tanta feret, nec non onerosa gravisque Pelias hasta potest inbellibus esse lacertis, nec clipeus vasti caelatus imagine mundi."
"Here is Hector, and he brings the gods with him into battle; and where he rushes on, not you alone are terrified, Ulysses, but brave men also; so much terror does he inspire. Him, rejoicing in the success of his bloody slaughter, I laid low upon the ground with a huge stone which I threw; and when he challenged one to meet him, I alone bore the brunt of his attack. You prayed, O Greeks, that the lot might fall to me, and your prayers were heard. If you ask the outcome of the battle, at least I was not overcome by him. Behold, the Trojans bring sword and fire and Jove against the Greek ships. Where now is the eloquent Ulysses? But I with my own breast stood bulwark for the thousand ships, the hope of your return. Grant me these arms for all those ships.

"But if I may speak truth, the arms claim greater honour than do I; they share my glory, and the arms seek Ajax, not Ajax the arms. Let the Ithacan compare with these deeds his Rhesus and unwarlike Dolon, his Helenus, Priam's son, taken captive, and the stolen Palladium: nothing done in the light of day, nothing apart from Diomede. If you are really giving that armour for so cheap deserts, divide it and let the larger share in them be Diomede's.

"But why give them to the Ithacan, who always does things stealthily, always unarmed, relying upon tricks to catch the enemy off his guard? The very glint of the helmet gleaming with bright gold will betray his snares and discover him as he hides. But neither will the Dulichian's head beneath the helmet of Achilles be able to bear so great a weight, nor can the spear-shaft, cut on Pelion, be otherwise than burdensome and heavy to his unwarlike arm. The shield also, a moulded picture of the vast universe, will not
OVID

conveniet timidae nataeque ad furta sinistae:
debilitaturum quid te petis, inprobe, munus, quod tibi si populi donaverit error Achivi, cur spolieris, erit, non, cur metuaris ab hoste, et fuga, qua sola cunctos, timidissime, vincis, tarda futura tibi est gestamina tanta trahenti?
adde quod iste tuus, tam raro proelia passus, integer est clipeus; nostro, qui tela ferendo mille patet plagis, novus est successor habendus.

"Denique (quid verbis opus est?) spectemur agendo!
arma viri fortis medios mittantur in hostes:
inde iubete peti et referentem ornatre relatis."

Finierat Telamone satus, vulgique secutum ultima murmur erat, donec Laertiis heros adstitit atque oculos paulum tellure moratos sustulit ad proceres exspectatoque resolvit ora sono, neque abest facundis gratia dictis.

"Si mea cum vestris valuissent vota, Pelasgi, non foret ambiguus tanti certaminis heres, tuque tuis armis, nos te poteremur, Achille, quem quoniam non aest mihi vobisque negarunt fata," (manuque simul veluti lacrimantia tersit lumina) "quis magno melius succedit Achilli, quam per quem magnus Danais successit Achilles?
huic modo ne prosit, quod, uti est, hebes esse vide-tur,
neve mihi noceat, quod vobis semper, Achivi, profuit ingenium, meaque haec facundia, siqua est become his timid hand, the left one, made for stealing. Why do you seek a prize, you shameless fellow, that will overtax your strength; a prize which, if by some mistake the Greeks should give it to you, will be reason for the foe to spoil, not fear you? And flight, in which alone you surpass all others, most timid as you are, will prove but slow for you if you carry such a weight. Consider also that that shield of yours, so rarely used in battle, is quite uninjured; while mine, pierced in a thousand places by the thrusts of spears, needs a fresh shield to take its place.

"Finally, what need of words? Let us be seen in action! Let the brave hero's arms be sent into the enemy's midst; bid them be recovered, and to their rescuer present the rescued arms."

The son of Telamon finished, and the applause of the crowd followed his closing words. At length Laërtes' heroic son stood up and, holding his eyes for a little on the ground, he raised them to the chiefs and broke silence with the words for which they waited; nor was grace of manner lacking to his eloquent speech.

"If my prayers and yours had availed, O Greeks, there would be no question as to the next heir in this great strife, and you, Achilles, would still have your own armour, and we should still have you. But since the unjust fates have denied him to me and you" (and with his hand he made as if to wipe tears from his eyes), "who would better receive the great Achilles' arms than he through whom the Greeks received the great Achilles? Only let it not be to this fellow's profit that he seems to be, as indeed he is, slow of wit; and let it not be, O Greeks, to my hurt that I have always used my wit for your advantage. And let this eloquence of mine, if I quae nunc pro domino, pro vobis saepe locuta est, invidia careat, bona nec sua quisque recuset.

"Nam genus et proavos et quae non fecimus ipsi, vix ea nostra voco, sed enim, quia rettulit Aiax esse Iovis pronepos, nostri quoque sanguinis auctor Iuppiter est, totidemque gradus distamus ab illo: nam mihi Laertes pater est, Arcesius illi, Iuppiter huic, neque in his quisquam damnatus et exul;
est quoque per matrem Cyllenius addita nobis altera nobilitas: deus est in utroque parente. sed neque materno quod sum generosior ortu, nec mihi quod pater est fraterni sanguinis insons, proposita arma peto: meritis expendite causam, dummodo, quod fratres Telamon Peleusque fuerunt, Aiacis meritum non sit nec sanguinis ordo, sed virtutis honor spoliis quae ratur in istis! aut si proximitas primusque requiritur heres, est genitor Peleus, est Pyrrhus filius illi: quis locus Aiaci? Phthiam haec Scyrumve ferantur! nec minus est isto Teucer patruelis Achilli: num petit ille tamen? num, si petat, auferat illa? ergo, operum quoniam nudum certamen habetur, plura quidem feci, quam quae conprendere dictis in promptu mihi sit, rerum tamen ordine ducar.

"Praescia venturi genetrix Nereia leti dissimulat cultu natum, et deceperat omnes, in quibus Aiacem, sumptae fallacia vestis: arma ego femineis animum motura virilem have any, which now speaks for its owner, but often for you as well, incur no enmity, and let each man make the most of his own powers.

“For as to race and ancestry and the deeds that others than ourselves have done, I call those in no true sense our own. But the truth is, since Ajax claims to be great-grandson of Jove, Jove is the founder of my race as well, and I am just as many steps removed from him. For Laërtes is my father, Arcesius, his, and he, the son of Jupiter; nor in this line is there any exiled criminal. I have also on my mother’s side another claim to noble birth, Cyllenius. Through both my parents have I divine descent. But, neither because through my mother I am more nobly born, nor because my father is guiltless of his brother’s blood, do I seek the armour that lies there. Weigh the cause on desert alone. Only count it not any desert of Ajax that Telamon and Peleus were brothers, and let not strains of blood, but the honour of manhood be considered in the award. Or, if you seek for next of kin and lawful heir, Peleus is Achilles’ father, Pyrrhus his son. What room is there for Ajax? Bear the armour hence to Phthia or to Scyrus. And Teucer is no less Achilles’ cousin than he. Yet does he seek the arms, and if he did seek would he gain them? So then, since ’tis a sheer strife of deeds, I have done more deeds than I can well enumerate. Still I will tell them in their order.

“Achilles’ Nereid mother, foreseeing her son’s destruction, had disguised him, and the trick of the clothing that he wore deceived them all, Ajax among the rest. But I placed among women’s wares some

1 Mercury.
2 The home of Peleus.
3 The home of Pyrrhus.
mercibus inserui, neque adhuc proiecerat heros virgineos habitus, cum parmam hastamque tenenti 'nate dea,' dixi 'tibi se peritura reservant Pergama! quid dubitas ingentem evertere Troiam?' iniecieque manum fortemque ad fortia misi. 170 ergo opera illius mea sunt: ego Telephon hasta pugnament domui victum orantemque refeci; quod Thebae cecidere, meum est; me credite Lesbon, me Tenedon Chrysenque et Cillan, Apollinis urbes, et Scyrum cepisse; mea concussa putate 175 procubuisse solo Lynnesia moenia dextra, utque alios taceam, qui saevum perdere posset Hectora, nempe dedi: per me iacet inclitus Hector! illis haec armis, quibus est inventus Achilles, arma peto: vivo dederam, post fata reposco. 180
"Ut dolor unius Danaos pervenit ad omnes, Aulidaque Euboicam conplerunt mille carinae, exspectata diu, nulla aut contraria classi flamina erant, duraeque iubent Agamemnona sortes inmeritam saevae natam mactare Dianae. 185 denegat hoc genitor divisque irascitur ipsis atque in rege tamen pater est, ego mite parentis ingenium verbis ad publica commoda verti:
hanc equidem (fateor, fassoque ignoscat Atrides) difficilem tenui sub iniquo iudice causam. 190 hunc tamen utilitas populi fraterque datique summa movet sceptri, laudem ut cum sanguine penset; mittor et ad matrem, quae non hortanda, sed astu 240 arms such as would attract a man. The hero still wore girl’s clothing when, as he laid hands on shield and spear, I said to him: ‘O son of Thetis, Pergama, doomed to perish, is keeping herself for you! Why do you delay the fall of mighty Troy?’ And I laid my hand on him and sent the brave fellow forth to do brave deeds. So then, all that he did is mine. ’Twas I who conquered the warring Telephus with my spear and healed him, vanquished and begging aid. That Thebes fell is my deed; credit Lesbos to me, to me Tenedos, Chryse and Cilla, cities of Apollo, and Scyrus too. Consider that by my hand the walls of Lynnesus were battered to the ground. And, not to mention others, ’twas I, indeed, who gave the man who could destroy the warlike Hector. Through me illustrious Hector lies low! These arms I seek in return for those by which Achilles was discovered. Arms I gave the living; after his death I ask them back.

"When the sorrow of one man came to all the Greeks, and a thousand ships were gathered at Euboean Aulis, there were no winds, though they waited for them long, or they blew contrary to the fleet. Then a cruel oracle bade Agamemnon sacrifice his innocent daughter to pitiless Diana. This the father refused to do and was angry at the gods themselves, having a father’s feelings though he was a king. It was I who by my words turned the kind father-heart to a consideration of the public weal; I indeed (I confess it, and may Atrides pardon as I confess) had a difficult cause to plead, and that, too, before a partial judge; still the people’s good, his brother, and the chief place of command assigned to him, all moved upon him to balance praise with blood. Then I was sent to the mother, who was not to be exhorted," decipienda fuit, quo si Telamonius isset, orba suis essent etiam nunc lintea ventis. 195

"Mittor et Iliacas audax orator ad arces, visaque et intrata est altae mihi curia Troiae, plenaque adhuc erat illa viris; interritus egi, quam mihi mandarat communis Graecia, causam 199 accusoque Parin praedamque Helenamque reposco et moveo Priamum Priamoque Antenora iunctum;
at Paris et fratres et qui rapuere sub illo, vix tenuere manus (scis hoc, Menelae) nefandas, primaque lux nostri tecum fuit illa pericli.

"Longa referre mora est, quae consilioque manuque utiliter feci spatiosi tempore belli. 206 post acies primas urbis se moenibus hostes continuere diu, nec aperti copia Martis ulla fuit; decimo demum pugnavimus anno:
quid facis interea, qui nil nisi proelia nosti? 210 quis tuus usus erat? nam si mea facta requiris, hostibus insidior, fossa munimina cingo, consolor socios, ut longi taedia belli mente ferant placida, doceo, quo simus alendi armandique modo, mittor, quo postulat usus. 215

"Ecce Iovis monitu deceptus imagine somni rex iubet incepti curam dimittere belli;
ille potest auctore suam defendere vocem:
non sinat hoc Aix delendaque Pergama poscat, 219 quodque potest, pugnet! cur non remoratur ituros?
but deceived by craft. But if the son of Telamon had gone to her, our sails would even now be destitute of their winds.

"I was sent also as a bold ambassador to Ilium's stronghold and visited and entered the senate-house of lofty Troy. It was still full of heroes. Undaunted, I pleaded the cause which united Greece had entrusted to me, I denounced Paris, demanded the return of Helen and the booty, and I prevailed on Priam and Antenor who sided with Priam. But Paris and his brothers and his companions in the robbery scarce restrained their impious hands from me (you know that, Menelaüs). That was the first day of my dangers shared with you.

"It would take a long time to tell the things I accomplished for your good both with thought and deed during the long-drawn war. After the first battles the enemy kept himself for a long time within his city's walls and there was no chance for open conflict. At last in the tenth year we fought. What were you doing in the meantime, you whose only knowledge is of battles? Of what service were you then? If you ask what I was doing, I laid snares for the enemy, I surrounded the fortifications with a trench, I encouraged our allies so that they might bear patiently the tedium of the long war, I advised as to how we should be fed and armed, I was sent on missions where circumstance demanded.

"Behold, at Jove's command, being deceived by a vision of the night, the king bids us give up the burden of the war we have undertaken. He can defend his order by quoting the source of it. Now let Ajax prevent this movement; let him demand that Pergama be destroyed and, what he can do, let him fight! Why does he not stay those who are cur non arma capit, dat, quod vaga turba sequatur?
non erat hoc nimium numquam nisi magna loquenti.
quid, quod et ipse fugit? vidi, puduitque videre, cum tu terga dares inhonestaque vela parares;
nec mora, 'quid facitis? quae vos dementia' dixi
'concitat, o socii, captam dimittere Troiam,' 226 quidque domum fertis decimo, nisi dedecus, anno?
talibus atque aliis, in quae dolor ipse disertum fererat, aversos profuga de classe reduxi.
convocat Atrides socios terrore paventes: 230
nec Telamoniades etiamnunc hiscere quicquam audet, at ausus erat reges incessere dictis Thersites etiam, per me haut inpune protervus' erigor et trepidos cives exhortor in hostem amissamque mea virtutem voce repono. 235 tempore ab hoc, quodcumque potest fecisse videri fortiter iste, meum est, qui dantem terga retraxi.

"Denique de Danais quis te laudatve petitve?
at sua Tydides mecum communicat acta, me probat et socio semper confidit Ulixe. 240 est aliquid, de tot Graiorum milibus unum a Diomede legi! nec me sors ire iubebat:
sic tamen et spreto noctisque hostisque periculo ausum eadem, quae nos, Phrygia de gente Dolona interimo, non ante tamen, quam cuncta coegi 245 prodere et edidici, quid perfida Troia pararet. starting home? Why does he not take arms and give something for the straggling mob to rally round? This was not too much for one who never speaks except in boasting. But what of the fact that he himself fled also? I saw you, and I was ashamed to see, when you turned your back and were for spreading your dishonoured sails. Instantly I cried: 'What are you doing? What madness, my friends, is driving you to abandon Troy, which is already captured? What are you taking home after ten years of war except disgrace?' With such and other words, to which my very grief had made me eloquent, I turned them from their intended flight and led them back. Atrides assembled the allies still perturbed and fearful; and even then the son of Telamon did not dare utter a single syllable. But Thersites dared, indeed, and chid the kings with words, unruly fellow, but, thanks to me, not without punishment! I arose and urged my faint-hearted comrades against the enemy, and by my words I aroused again their courage. From that time on, whatever brave deed my rival here can claim to have accomplished belongs to me who brought him back from flight.

"Finally, who of the Greeks praises you or seeks your company? But Diomede shares his deeds with me, approves me, and is ever confident with Ulysses at his side. Surely, 'tis something, alone out of the many thousand Greeks, to be picked out by Diomede! And it was not the casting of lots that bade me go. Still, spurning all perils of night and of the enemy, I went forth and slew Phrygian Dolon, who was on the same perilous errand with ourselves. And yet I did not slay him till I had forced him to tell all he knew and had learned what treacherous Troy was planning.
omnia cognoram nec, quod specularer, habebam et iam promissa poteram cum laude reverti: haut contentus eo petii tentoria Rhesi inque suis ipsum castris comitesque peremi atque ita captivo, victor votisque potitus, ingredior curru laetos imitante triumphos; cuius equos pretium pro nocte poposcerat hostis, arma negate mihi, fueritque benignior Aiax.— quid Lycii referam Sarpedonis agmina ferro devastata meo? cum multo sanguine fudi Coeranon Iphitiden et Alastoraque Chromiumque Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque exitioque dedi cum Chersidamante Thoona et Charopem fatisque inmitibus Ennomon actum quique minus celebres nostra sub moenibus urbis procubuere manu. sunt et mihi vulnera, cives, ipso pulchra loco; nec vanis credite verbis, aspicite! en" vestemque manu deduxit et "haec sunt pectora semper" ait "vestris exercita rebus! at nil inpendit per tot Telamonius annos sanguinis in socios et habet sine vulnere corpus!

"Quid tamen hoc refert, si se pro classe Pelasga arma tulisse refert contra Troasque Iovemque? confiteorque, tulit (neque enim benefacta maligne detractare meum est), sed ne communia solus occupet atque aliquem vobis quoque reddat honorem, reppulit Actorides sub imagine tutus Achillis
I had found out all and had no further cause for spying, and I could now go back with the praise which I had striven for; but not content with this, I turned to Rhesus' tents and in his very camp I slew the captain and his comrades too. And so, victorious and with my prayers accomplished, I went on my way in my captured chariot in manner of a joyful triumph. Now refuse his arms to me, whose horses my enemy had demanded as the price of his night's work, and let Ajax be the kinder! Why should I mention the Lycian Sarpedon's ranks which my sword cut to pieces? I laid low in bloody slaughter Coeranos, the son of Iphitus, Alastor and Chromius, Alcander, Halius, Noëmon, Prytanis, slew Thoön and Chersidamas, Charopes, Ennomos, driven by the pitiless fates; and others less renowned fell by my hand beneath their city's walls. I, too, have wounds, my comrades, noble for the very place of them. And trust no empty words of mine for that. See here!" and he threw open his garment with his hand; "here is my breast which has ever suffered for your cause! But the son of Telamon in all these years has lost no blood in his friends' behalf and his body can show no wound at all.

"And what matters it if he says that he stood up in arms for the Greek fleet against the Trojans and the power of Jove? I grant he did; for it is not my way maliciously to belittle the good that he has done. But let not him alone claim the honour that belongs to all, and let him give some credit to you also. 'Twas the son of Actor, safe 'neath the semblance of Achilles, who drove off the Trojans from

---

1 This is a reference to Ajax' ironical proposition in l. 102, to divide the armour between Ulysses and Diomede.

2 Patroclus.
Troas ab arsuris cum defensore carinis.— ausum etiam Hectoreis solum concurrere telis se putat, oblitus regisque ducumque meique, nonus in officio et praelatus munere sortis.
sed tamen eventus vestrae, fortissime, pugnae quis fuit? Hector abit violatus vulnere nullo!
“Me miserum, quanto cogor meminisse dolore temporis illius, quo, Graium murus, Achilles procubuit! nec me lacrimae luctusve timorve tardarunt, quin corpus humo sublime referrem:
his umeris, his inquam, umeris ego corpus Achillis et simul arma tuli, quae nunc quoque ferre laboro.
sunt mihi, quae valeant in talia pondera, vires, est animus certe vestros sensurus honores:
scilicet idcirco pro nato caerula mater ambitiosa suo fuit, ut caelestia dona, artis opus tantae, rudis et sine pectore miles indueret? neque enim elipei caelamina novit, Oceanum et terras cumque alto sidera caelo Pleiadasque Hyadasque inmunemque aequoris Arcton diversasque urbes nitidumque Orionisensem:
postulat, ut capiat, quae non intellegit, arma!
“Quid, quod me duri fugientem munera belli arguit incepto serum accessisse labori nec se magnanimo maledicere sentit Achilli?
si simulasse vocas crimen, simulavimus ambo;
si mora pro culpa est, ego sum maturior illo.
me pia detinuit coniunx, pia mater Achillem, primaque sunt illis data tempora, cetera vobis:
haut timeo, si iam nequeam defendere, crimen
the fleet, which else had burned together with its defender. He thinks that he alone dared to stand up against Hector's spear, ignoring the king, the chieftains, and myself, he but the ninth in proffered service and by the lot's grace preferred to us. But what was the outcome of your battle, bravest of men? Hector retired without a wound.

"Ah me, with what grief am I forced to recall that time when Achilles fell, the bulwark of the Greeks! And yet neither tears nor grief nor fear kept me from lifting up his body from the ground. On these shoulders, yes, on these very shoulders, I bore Achilles' body, armour and all, arms which now also I seek to bear. I have strength enough to bear their ponderous weight and I have a mind that can appreciate the honour you would do me. Was it for this, forsooth, that the hero's mother, goddess of the sea, was ambitious for her son, that those heavenly gifts, the work of heavenly art should clothe a rough and stupid soldier? For he knows nothing of the relief-work of the shield: the sea, the lands, the deep starry heavens, the Pleiades, the Hyades, Arctos forbidden the sea, the scattered cities, and Orion’s gleaming sword. He asks that he may receive armour which he cannot appreciate.

"What of his chiding me with trying to shun the hardships of the war and of coming late when the struggle had begun? Does he not know that he is reviling the great Achilles also? If you call it a crime to have pretended, we both pretended. If delay is culpable, I was the earlier of the two. A loving wife detained me; a loving mother detained Achilles. Our first time was given to them, the rest to you. I do not fear a charge—even granted I could not answer it—which I share with so great a hero. Yet he was cum tanto commune viro: deprensus Ulixis ingenio tamen ille, at non Aiacis Ulixes.

"Neve in me stolidae convicia fundere linguae admirerum eum, vobis quoque digna pudore obicit. an falsa Palameden crimine turpe accusasse mihi, vobis damnasse decorum est? sed neque Naupliades facinus defendere tantum tamque patens valuit, nec vos audistis in illo crimina, vidistis, pretioque obiecta patebant.

"Nec, Poeantiaden qued habet Vulcania Lemnos, esse reus merui (factum defendite vestrum! consensistis enim,) nec me suasisse negabo, ut se subtraheret bellique viaeque labori temptaretque feros requie lenire dolores. paruit—et vivit! non haec sententia tantum fida, sed et felix, cum sit satis esse fidelem. quem quoniam vates delenda ad Pergama poscunt, ne mandate mihi! melius Telamonius ibit eloquioque virum morbis iraque furentem molliet aut aliqua producet callidus arte' ante retro Simois fluet et sine frondibus Ide stabit, et auxilium promittet Achaia Troiae, quam, cessante meo pro vestris pectore rebus, Aiacis stolidi Danais sollertia prosit.

sis licet infestus sociis regique mihi dure Philoctete, licet exsecrere meumque devoeas sine fine caput cupiasque dolenti me tibi forte dari nostrumque haurire cruorem, discovered by Ulysses' wit; but not by Ajax' wit, Ulysses.

"And let us not wonder that he pours out against me the insults of his stupid tongue; for he vents on you also shameful words. Was it base for me to have accused Palamedes on a false charge, and honourable for you to have condemned him? But neither was the son of Nauplius able to defend a crime so great, so clearly proved, nor did you merely hear the charge against him: you saw the proof, as it lay clearly revealed by the bribe.

"Nor should I be blamed because Vulcanian Lemnos holds the son of Poeas. Defend your own deed, for you consented to it. But I will not deny that I advised that he withdraw from the hardships of the war and the journey thither, and seek to soothe his terrible anguish by a time of rest. He took the advice—and lives! And not alone was this advice given in good faith, but it was fortunate as well; though it is enough that it was given in good faith. Now, since our seers say that he is necessary for the fall of Pergama, do not entrust the task to me! Telamon's son will better go, and by his eloquence he will calm the hero, mad with pain and rage, or else by some shrewd trick will bring him to us. Nay, Simois will flow backward, Ida stand without foliage, and Greece send aid to Troy before the craft of stupid Ajax would avail the Greeks in case I should cease to work for your advantage. Though you have a deadly hatred, O harsh Philoctetes, for the allied Greeks and the king and me myself; though you heap endless curses on my head and long in your misery to have me in your power, to drink my blood, and pray that, as I was given a 1 Palamedes. 2 Philoctetes.

OVID

utque tui mihi sic fiat, tibi copia nostri:
te tamen adgrediari mecumque reducere nitar tamque tuis potiar (faveat Fortuna) sagittis, quam sum Dardanio, quem cepi, vate potitus, quam responsa deum Troianaque fata retexti, quam rapui Phrygiae signum penetrabile Minervae hostibus e mediis. et se mihi comparat Aiax?
nempe capi Troiam prohibebant fata sine illo:
fortis ubi est Aiax? ubi sunt ingentia magni verba viri? cur hic metuis? cur audet Ulixes ire per excubias et se committere nocti perque feros enses non tantum moenia Troum, verum etiam summas arces intrare suaque eripere aede deam raptamque adferre per hostes? quae nisi fecissem, frustra Telamone creatus gestasset laeva taurorum tergore septem.
illa nocte mihi Troiae victoria parta est:
Pergama tunc vici, cum vinci posse coegi.

"Desine Tydiden vultuque et murmure nobis ostentare meum: pars est sua laudis in illo!
neu tu, cum socia clipeum pro classe tenebas, solis eras: tibi turba comes, mihi contigit unus.
qui nisi pugnacem sciret sapiente minorem esse nec indomitae deberi praemia dextrae, ipse quoque haec peteret; peteret moderatior Aiax Eurypylusque ferox claroque Andraemone natus nec minus Idomeneus patriaque creatus eadem Meriones, peteret maioris frater Atridae:"
chance at you, so you may have a chance at me; still would I go to you and strive to bring you back with me. And I should get possession of your arrows (should Fortune favour me), just as I got possession of the Dardanian seer, whom I made captive; just as I discovered the oracles of the gods and the fates of Troy; just as I stole away from the midst of the enemy the enshrined image of Phrygian Minerva. And does Ajax compare himself to me? The fact is, the fates declared that we could not capture Troy without this sacred statue. Where now is the brave Ajax? Where are those big words of the mighty hero? Why do you fear in such a crisis? Why does Ulysses dare to go out beyond the sentinels, commit himself to the darkness and, through the midst of cruel swords, enter not alone the walls of Troy but even the citadel's top, steal the goddess from her shrine and bear her captured image through the enemy? Had I not done this, in vain would the son of Telamon have worn on his left arm the sevenfold bulls'-hide shield. On that night I gained the victory over Troy; at that moment did I conquer Pergama when I made it possible to conquer her.

"Cease by your looks and mutterings to remind us that Tydides was my partner. He has his share of praise. You, too, when you held your shield in defence of the allied fleet, were not alone. You had a throng of partners; I, but one. And if Diomede did not know that a fighter is of less value than a thinker, and that the prize was not due merely to a right hand, however dauntless, he himself also would be seeking it; so would the lesser Ajax, warlike Eurypylus and the son of illustrious Andraemon, and no less so Idomeneus and his fellow-countryman, Meriones; yes, Menelaüs, too, would seek the prize.
quippe manu fortes nec sunt mihi Marte secundi, 360 consiliis cessere meis. tibi dextera bello utilis, ingenium est, quod eget moderamine nostro; tu vires sine mente geris, mihi cura futuri; tu pugnare potes, pugnandi tempora mecum eligit Atrides; tu tantum corpore prodes, nos animo; quantoque ratem qui temperat, anteit remigis officium, quanto dux milite maior, tantum ego te supero, nec non in corpore nostro pectora sunt potiora manu: vigor omnis in illis.

"At vos, o proceres, vigili date praemia vestro, 365 proque tot annorum cura, quibus anxius egi, hunc titulum meritis pensandum reddite nostris: iam labor in fine est; obstantia fata removi altaque posse capi faciendo Pergama, cepi. per spes nunc socias casuraque moenia Troum 370 perque deos oro, quos hosti nuper ademi, per siquid superest, quod sit sapienter agendum, siquid adhuc audax ex praecipitique petendum est, si Troiae fatis aliquid restare putatis, este mei memoria! aut si mihi non datis arma, 380 huic date!" et ostendit signum fatale Minervae.

Mota manus procerum est, et quid facundia posset, re patuit, fortisque viri tulit arma disertus.
But all these men, though stout of hand, fully my equals on the battlefield, have yielded to my intelligence. Your right arm is useful in the battle; but when it comes to thinking you need my guidance. You have force without intelligence; while mine is the care for to-morrow. You are a good fighter; but it is I who help Atrides select the time of fighting. Your value is in your body only; mine, in mind. And, as much as he who directs the ship surpasses him who only rows it, as much as the general excels the common soldier, so much greater am I than you. For in these bodies of ours the heart is of more value than the hand; all our real living is in that.

"But do you, O princes, award the prize to your faithful guardian. In return for the many years which I have spent in anxious care, grant me this honour as the reward of all my services. And now my task is at an end; I have removed the obstructing fates and, by making it possible to take tall Pergama, I have taken her. Now, by our united hopes, by the Trojan walls doomed soon to fall, by the gods of whom but lately I deprived the foe, by whatever else remains still to be done with wisdom, if still some bold and hazardous deed must be attempted, if you think aught still is lacking to the fate of Troy, I beg you remember me! Or, if you do not give the arms to me, give them to her!" and he pointed to the fateful statue of Minerva.

The company of chiefs was moved, and their decision proved the power of eloquence: and the eloquent man bore off the brave man's arms. Then he who had so often all alone withstood great

1 i.e. the mind or understanding. We should make the contrast between head and hand.
Hectora qui solus, qui ferrum ignesque iuvemque sustinuit totiens, unam non sustinet iram, invictumque virum vicit dolor: arripit ensem et "meus hic certe est! an et hunc sibi poseit Ulixes?
hoc" ait "utendum est in me mihi, quique cruore saepe Phrygum maduit, domini nunc caede madebit, ne quisquam Aiacem possit superare nisi Aiay." dixit et in pectus tum demum vulnera passum, qua patuit ferro, letalem condidit ensem. nec valuere manus in fixum educere telum: expulit ipse cruor, rubefactaque sanguine tellus purpureum viridi genuit de caespite florem, qui prius Oebalio fuerat de vulnere natus; littera communis mediis pueroque viroque inscripta est foliis, haec nominis, illa querellae.
Victor ad Hypsipyles patriam clarique Thoantis et veterum terras insames caede virorum vela dat, ut referat Tirynthia tela, sagittas; quae postquam ad Graios domino comitante revexit, inposita est sero tandem manus ultima bello. Troia simul Priamusque cadunt. Priameia coniunx perdidit infelix hominis post omnia formam externasque novo latratu terruit auras, longus in angustum qua clauditur Hellespontus. Ilion ardebat, neque adhuc consederat ignis· exiguumque senis Priami Iovis ara cruorem conbiberat, tractatque comis antistita Phoebi non prefecturas tendebat ad aethera palmas. Dardanidas matres patriorum signa deorum, Hector, so often sword and fire and Jove, could not withstand passion only; and resentment conquered the unconquered hero. Then, snatching out his sword, he cried: “But this at least is mine; or does Ulysses claim this also for himself? This I must employ against myself; and the sword which has often reeked with Phrygian blood will now reek with its master’s, lest any man save Ajax ever conquer Ajax.” He spoke and deep in his breast, which had not until then suffered any wound, where the way was open for the blow, he plunged his fatal sword. No hand was strong enough to draw away the deep-driven steel; the blood itself drove it out. The ensanguined ground produced from the green sod a purple flower, which in old time had sprung from Hyacinthus’ blood. The petals are inscribed with letters, serving alike for hero and for boy: this one a name, and that, a cry of woe.

To the land of Queen Hypsipyle and the illustrious Thoas, once infamous for its murdered men of olden time, victorious Ulysses now set sail to bring thence the Tirynthian arrows. After he had brought these to the Greeks, and their master with them, the final blow was at last given to the long-drawn war. Troy fell and Priam with it. The poor wife of Priam after all else lost her human form and with strange barking affrighted the alien air where the long Hellespont narrows to a strait. Ilium was in flames, nor had its fires yet died down, and Jove’s altar had drunk up the scanty blood of aged Priam. The priestess of Apollo, dragged by the hair, was stretching to the heavens her unavailing hands. The Trojan women, embracing the

1 ΑΙΑΣ.  2 ΑΙΑΙ.  3 Lemnos.  4 i.e. of Hercules.  5 Philoctetes.  6 Cassandra.
dum licet, amplexas succensaque templaque invidiosa trahunt victores praemia Grai; mittitur Astyanax illis de turribus, unde pugnantem pro se proavitaque regna tuentem saepe videre patrem monstratum a matre solebat.
iamque viam suadet Boreas, flatuque secundo carbasa mota sonant: iubet uti navita ventis; “Troia, vale! rapimur” clamant, dant oscula terrae Troades et patriae fumantia tecta relinquunt.
ultima conscendit classem—miserabile visu!—
in mediis Hecube natorum inventa sepulcris:
prensantem tumulos atque ossibus oscula dantem Dulichiae traxere manus, tamen unius hausit inque sinu cineres secum tulit Hectoris haustos; Hectoris in tumulo canum de vertice crinem, inferias inopes, crinem lacrimasque reliquit.

Est, ubi Troia fuit, Phrygiae contraria tellus Bistoniis habitata viris: Polymestoris illic regia dives erat, cui te commisit alendum clam, Polydore, pater Phrygiisque removit ab armis, consilium sapiens, sceleris nisi praemia magnas adiecisset opes, animi inritamen avari.
ut cecidit fortuna Phrygum, capit inpius ensem rex Thracum iuguloque sui demisit alumni et, tamquam tolli cum corpore crimina possent, exanimum scopulo sujectas misit in undas.

Litore Threicio classem religarat Atrides, dum mare pacatum, dum ventus amicior esset:
images of their country's gods while still they might and crowding their burning temples, the victorious Greeks dragged off, an enviable booty. And Astyanax was hurled down from that tower where he was wont often to sit and watch his father whom his mother pointed out fighting for honour and safeguarding his ancestral realm. And now the North-wind called them on their way and the sails flapped loud, swelled by the favouring breeze. The mariner gives command to sail. "O Troy, farewell! we are forced away," the Trojan women cry; they kiss their land, and turn their backs upon their smoking homes. The last to go on board, a pitiable sight, was Hecuba, discovered midst the sepulchres of her sons. There, as she clung to their tombs, striving to give her farewell kisses to their bones, the hands of the Dulichian dragged her away. Yet she rescued Hector's ashes only, and bore the rescued dust with her in her bosom. And on Hector's tomb she left locks of her hoary hair, a meagre offering, her hair and tears.

Opposite to Phrygia where Troy stood, there lies a land where dwelt the Bistones. There was the luxurious court of Polymestor, to whom your father, Polydorus, secretly commended you for care, sending you far from Phrygia's strife; a prudent plan, if he had not sent with you a great store of treasure, the prize of crime, a temptation to a greedy soul. When the Phrygian fortunes waned, the impious Thracian king took his sword and thrust it into his young charge's throat; and just as if a murder could be disposed of with the victim's body, he threw the corpse from a cliff into the waves below.

On this Thracian coast Atrides had moored his fleet until the sea should quiet down and the winds hic subito, quantus, cum viveret, esse solebat, exit humo late rupta similisque minanti temporis illius vultum referebat Achilles, quo ferus in iusto petiit Agamemnona ferro
"innemores"que "mei disceditis," inquit "Achivi, brutaque est mecum virtutis gratia nostrae! 446 ne facite! utque meum non sit sine honore sepulcrum, placet Achilleos mactata Polyxena manes!"
dixit, et inimiti sociis parentibus umbrae, rapta sinu matris, quam iam prope sola fovebat, 450 fortis et infelix et plus quam femina virgo ducitur ad tumulum diroque fit hostia busto.
quae memor ipsa sui postquam crudelibus aris admota est sensitque sibi fera sacra parari, utque Neoptoleumum stantem ferrumque tenentem;
inque suo vidit figentem lumina vultu, 456
"utere iandudum generoso sanguine" dixit
"(nulla mora est), aut tu iugulo vel pectore telum conde meo": (iugulumque simul pectore re_hit. scilicet haud ulli servire Polyxena vellet!) 460
"haud per tale sacrum numen placabitis ullum!
mors tantum vellem matrem mea fallere posset:
mater obest minuitque necis mihi gaudia, quamvis non mea mors illi, verum sua vita tremenda est.
vos modo, ne Stygios adeam non libera manes, 465 mite procul, si iusta peto, tactuque viriles virgineo removete manus! acceptior illi, ququis is est, quem caede mea placare paratis, liber erit sanguis. siquos tamen ultima nostri verba movent oris (Priami vos filia regis, 470 non captiva rogat), genetrici corpus inemptum 260 be more favourable. Here on a sudden, up from the wide-gaping earth, Achilles sprang, large as he was in life. He had a threatening manner and a look as on that day when with his hostile sword he fiercely challenged Agamemnon. "And are you, then, departing, ye Greeks," he cried, "forgetful of me? And have your thanks for my services been buried with me? It shall not be! And, that my tomb may not lack its fitting honour, let Polyxena be sacrificed and so appease Achilles' shade." He spoke, and the allied Greeks obeyed the pitiless ghost. Torn from her mother's arms, of whom she was well-nigh the only comfort left, the brave, ill-fated maid, with more than woman's courage, was led to the fatal mound and there was sacrificed upon the cruel tomb. Self-possessed she was, even when she had been placed before the fatal altar and knew the grim rites were preparing for her; and when she saw Neoptolemus standing, sword in hand, with his eyes fixed upon her face, she exclaimed: "Spill at last my noble blood, for I am ready; or plunge your sword deep in my throat or breast!" (and she bared her throat and breast. Polyxena, be sure, would not desire to live in slavery to any man!) "Not by such a rite as this will you appease any god! Only I would that my mother may know nothing of my death. My mother prevents and destroys my joy of death. And yet she should not deprecate my death, but rather her own life. Only do you, that I may go free to the Stygian spirits, stand back, if my request is just, and let no hand of man touch my virgin body. More acceptable to him, whoever he is, whom by my sacrifice you are seeking to appease, will my free blood be. But if my last words move any of you ('tis the daughter of King Priam and not a captive maid who asks it), reddite, neve auro redimat ius triste sepulcri, sed lacrimis! tunc, cum poterat, redimebat et auro." dixerat, at populus lacrimas, quas illa tenebat, non tenet; ipse etiam flens invitusque sacerdos praebita coniecto rupit praecordia ferro.
illa super terram defecto poplite labens:
pertulit intrepidos ad fata novissima vultus;
tunc quoque cura fuit partes velare tegendas, cum caderet, castique decus servare pudoris.

Troades excipiunt deploratosque recensent Priamidas et quot dederit domus una cruores, teque gemunt, virgo, teque, o modo regia coniunx, regia dicta parens, Asiae florentis imago, nunc etiam praedae mala sors; quam victor Ulixes esse suam nollet, nisi quod tamen Hекторa partu ediderat: dominum matri vix repperit Hектор !
quae corpus conplexa animae tam fortis inane, quas totiens patriae dederat natisque viroque, hus quoque dat lacrimas; lacrimas in vulnera fundit osculaque ore tegit consuetaque pectora plangit cani tiumque suam concreto in sanguine verrens plura quidem, sed et haec laniato pectore, dixit:
"nata, tuae—quid enim superest?—dolor ulime matris,
nata, iaces, videoque tuum, mea vulnera, vulnus: 495
en, ne perdiderim quemquam sine caede meorum, tu quoque vulnus habes; at te, quia femina, rebar
a ferro tutam: cecidisti et femina ferro, restore my body to my mother without ransom; and let her pay in tears and not in gold for the sad privilege of sepulture. She did pay in gold also when she could.” She spoke, and the throng could not restrain their tears, though she restrained her own.
Then did the priest, himself also weeping and remorseful, with deep-driven weapon pierce her proffered breast. She, sinking down to earth with fainting knees, kept her look of dauntless courage to the end. And even then, as she was falling, she took care to cover her body and to guard the honour of her modesty.

The Trojan women take up her body and count one by one the lamented Priamidae, and all the woes which this one house has suffered. You, royal maid, they weep, and you, who but yesterday were called queen-consort and queen-mother, you, once the embodiment of proud Asia, but now suffering hard lot even for a captive, one whom victorious Ulysses would not desire, save that she had given birth to Hector. A lord for his mother Hector scarcely found! She, embracing the lifeless body of that brave spirit, gives to it also the tears which she has shed so often for country, sons and husband. She pours her tears into her daughter’s wound, covers her face with kisses, and beats the breasts that have endured so many blows. Then sweeping her white hair in the clotted blood and tearing her breast, this and much more she cried: “O child, your mother’s last cause for grief—for what else is left me—my child, low you lie, and I see your wound, my wound. Behold, that I might lose none of my children without violence, you also have your wound. But you, because you were a woman, I thought safe from the sword; even though totque tuos idem fratres, te perdidit idem, extium Troiae nostrique orbator, Achilles; 500
at postquam cecidit Paridis Phoebique sagittis, ‘nunc certe,’ dixi, ‘non est metuendus Achilles’:
nunc quoque mi metuendus erat; cinis ipse sepulti in genus hoc saevit, tumulo quoque sensimus hostem: Aeacidae fecunda fui! iacet Ilion ingens, eventuque gravi finita est publica clades, led finita tamen; soli mihi Pergama restant.
in cursuque meus dolor est: modo maxima rerum, tot generis natisque potens nuribusque viroque nunc trahor exul, inops, tumulis avulsa meorum, 510 Penelopae munus, quae me data pensa trahentem matribus ostendens Ithacis ‘haec Hectoris illa est clara parens, haec est’ dicet ‘Priameia coniunx,’ postque tot amissos tu nunc, quae sola levabas maternos luctus, hostilia busta piasti!
inferias hosti peperi! quo ferrea resto?
quidve moror? quo me servas, annosa senectus?
quo, di crudeles, nisi uti nova funera cernam, vivacem differtis anum? quis posse putaret felicem Priamum post diruta Pergama dici? 520 felix morte sua est! nec te, mea nata, peremptam adspicit et vitam pariter regnumque reliquit.
at, puto, funeribus dotabere, regia virgo, condeturque tuum monumentis corpus avitis!
non haec est fortuna domus: tibi munera matris 525 264
a woman, you have fallen by the sword; and that same Achilles, who had destroyed all your brothers, has destroyed you, too, that curse of Troy, bereaver of my heart. But when he fell by Paris' and by Phoebus' arrows, 'Surely,' I said, 'now is Achilles to be feared no more.' But even now I was still to fear him. His very ashes, though he is dead and buried, are savage against our race; even in the tomb we have felt him for our enemy; for Achilles have I been fruitful! Great Troy lies low, and by a woeful issue the public calamity was ended; yet it was ended; for me alone Pergama still survives; my woes still run their course. But late on the pinnacle of fame, strong in my many sons, my daughters, and my husband, now, exiled, penniless, torn from the tombs of my loved ones, I am dragged away as prize for Penelope. And as I sit spinning my allotted task of wool, she will point me out to the dames of Ithaca and say: 'This woman is Hector's noble mother, this is Priam's queen.' And now after so many have been lost, you, who alone were left to console your mother's grief, you have been sacrificed upon our foeman's tomb. Yes, I have but borne a victim for my enemy. And to what end do I, unfeeling wretch, live on? Why do I linger? To what end, O wrinkled age, do you keep me here? To what end, ye cruel gods, save that I still may see fresh funerals, do you prolong an old woman's life? Who would suppose that Priam could be called happy when Pergama was o'erthrown? Happy is he in death. He does not see you, my daughter, lying murdered here; he left his life and kingdom, both at once. But I suppose, O royal maiden, you will be dowered with funeral rites and your body buried in your ancestral tomb. Such is no longer the fortune of our house. Your contingent fletus peregrinaeque haustus harenae!
onnia perdidimus: superest, cur vivere tempus in breve sustineam, proles gratissima matri, nune solus, quondam minimus de stirpe virili, has datus Ismario regi Polydorus in oras.

quid moror interea crudelia vulnera lymphis abluere et sparsos inimiti sanguine vultus?"

Dixit et ad litus passu processit anili, albentes lacerata comas. "date, Troades, urnam!"
dixerat infelix, liquidas hauriret ut undas:
adspicit eiectum Polydori in litore corpus factaque Threiciis ingentia vulnera telis; Troades exclamant, obmutuit illa dolore, et pariter vocem lacrimasque introrsus obortas devorat ipse dolor, duroque simillima saxo torpet et adversa figit modo lumina terra, interdum torvos sustollit ad aethera vultus, nunc positi spectat vultum, nunc vulnera nati, vulnera praecipue, seque armat et instruit iram.
quae simul exarsit, tamquam regina maneret, ulcisci statuit poenaeque in imagine tota est, utque furit catulo lactente orbata leaena signaque nacta pedum sequitur, quem non videt, hostem,
sic Hecube, postquam cum luctu miscuit iram,
non oblita animorum, annorum oblita suorum, vadit ad artificem dirae, Polymestora, caedis conloquiumque petit; nam se monstrare relictum velle latens illi, quod nato redderet, aurum.
funeral gifts shall be your mother’s tears; your burial, the sand of an alien shore! We have lost all; but still there’s something left, some reason why for a brief span I may endure to live: his mother’s dearest, now her only child, once youngest of my sons, my Polydorus, sent to these shores to the Thracian king. But why do I delay, meanwhile, to wash my daughter’s cruel wounds with water, her face bespattered with unpitying blood?"

She spoke and with tottering steps of age went to the shore, tearing her grey hair as she went. “Give me an urn, ye Trojan women,” the wretched creature said, intending to dip up some water from the sea. And there she saw the body of Polydorus, cast up upon the shore, covered with gaping wounds made by Thracian spears. The Trojan women shrieked at the sight; but she was dumb with grief; her very grief engulfed her powers of speech, her rising tears. Like a hard rock, immovable she stood, now held her gaze fixed upon the ground, and at times lifted her awful face to the heavens; now she gazed upon the features of her son as he lay there in death, now on his wounds, but mostly on his wounds, arming herself and heaping up her rage. When now her rage blazed out, as if she still were queen, she fixed on vengeance and was wholly absorbed in the punishment her imagination pictured. And as a lioness rages when her suckling cub has been stolen from her, and follows the discovered tracks of her enemy, whom she does not see, so Hecuba, wrath mingling with her grief, regardless of her years but not her deadly purpose, went straight to Polymestor, who wrought the heartless murder, and sought an audience with him, pretending that she wished to show him a store of gold which she had hoarded for her son and credidit Odrysius praedaeque adsuetus amore in secreta venit: tum blando callidus ore “tolle moras, Hecube,” dixit “da munera nato!
omne fore illius, quod das, quod et ante dedisti, per superos iuro.” spectat truculenta loquentem falsaque iurantem tumidaque exaestuat ira atque ita correpto captivarum agmina matrum invocat et digitos in perfida lumina condit expellitque genus oculos (facit ira potentem) inmergitque manus foedataque sanguine sotis non lumen (neque enim superest), loca luminis haurit.
clade sui Thracum gens inritata tyranni Troada telorum lapidumque incessere iactu toepit, at haec missum raaco cum murmure saxum morsibus insequitur rictuque in verba parato latavit, conata loqui: locus exstat et ex re nomen habet, veterumque diu memor illa malorum tum quoque Sithonios ululavit maesta per agros.
illius Troasque suos hostesque Pelasgos, illius fortuna deos quoque moverat omnes, sic omnes, ut et ipsa Iovis coniunxque sororque eventus Hecubam meruisse negaverit illos.

Non vacat Aurorae, quamquam isdem faverat armis, cladibus et casu Troiaeque Hecubaeque moveri.
cura deam propior luctusque domesticus angit Memnonis amissi, Phrygiis quem lutea campis vidit Achillea pereuntem cuspide mater; vidit, et ille color, quo matutina rubescunt now would give him. The Thracian was deceived and, led by his habitual lust for gain, he came to the hiding-place. Then craftily, with smooth speech he said; “Come, Hecuba, make haste, give me the treasure for your son! I swear by the gods of heaven, all shall be his, what you give now and what you have given before.” She grimly eyed him as he spoke and swore his lying oath. Then did her rising wrath boil over, and, calling the captive women to the attack, she seized upon him, dug her fingers into his lying eyes and gouged his eyeballs from their sockets—so mighty did wrath make her. Then she plunged in her hands and, stained with his guilty blood, she plucked out, not his eyes, for they were gone, but the places of his eyes. The Thracians, incensed by their king’s disaster, began to set upon the Trojan with shafts and stones. But she, with hoarse growls, bit at the stones they threw and, though her jaws were set for words, barked when she tried to speak. The place still remains and takes its name from this incident, where she, long remembering her ancient ills, still howled mournfully across the Sithonian plains. Her sad fortune touched the Trojans and her Grecian foes and all the gods as well; yes, all, for even Juno, sister and wife of Jove, declared that Hecuba had not deserved such an end.

But Aurora, though she had lent her aid to the Trojan arms, had no time to lament the ruin and the fall of Troy and Hecuba. A nearer care, grief for her own son, harassed her, the loss of Memnon, whom she, his bright mother, had seen dead by Achilles’ spear on the Phrygian plain. She saw and those bright hues

1 Cynossema (κυνόε σῖμα), the Sign (or Monument) of the Dog.
tempora, palluerat, latuitque in nubibus aether.
at non inpositos supremis ignibus artus sustinuit spectare parens, sed crime soluto sic ut erat, magni genibus procumbere non est 585 dedignata Iovis lacrimisque has addere voce:
"omnibus inferior, quas sustinet aureus aether, (nam mihi sunt totum rarissima templorum per orbem) diva tamen, veni, non ut delubra diesque des mihi sacrificos caliturasque ignibus aras:
si tamen adspicias, quantum tibi femina praestem, tum cum luce nova noctis confinia servo, praemia danda putes; sed non ea cura neque hic est nunc status Aurorae, meritos ut poscat honores: Memnonis orba mei venio, qui fortia frustra 590 pro patruo tulit arma suo primisque sub annis occidit a forti (sic vos voluistis) Achille.
da, precor, huic aliquem, solacia mortis, honorem, summe deum rector, maternaque vulnera leni!" Iuppiter adnuerat, cum Memnonis arduus alto 600 corruit igne rogus, nigrique volumina fumi infecere diem, veluti cum flumina natas exhalant nebulas, nec sol admittitur infra; atra favilla volat glomerataque corpus in unum densetur faciemque capit sumitque calorem 605 atque animam ex igni (levitas sua praebuit alas) et primo similis volucris, mox vera volucris insonuit pennis, pariter sonuere sorores innumeræ, quibus est eadem natalis origo, by which the morning skies flush rosy red grew dull, and the heavens were overcast with clouds. And when his corpse was laid upon the funeral pyre his mother endured not to look upon it, but, with streaming hair, just as she was, she disdained not to throw herself at the knees of mighty Jove and with many tears to pray: "Though I am least of all whom the golden heaven upholds (for in all the world but few and scattered temples rise to me), still as a goddess I come I ask not that thou give me shrines and sacred days and altars to flame with sacrificial fires. And yet, shouldst thou consider what service I, though but a woman, render thee, when each new dawn I guard the borders of the night, then wouldst thou deem that I should have some reward. But that is not my care nor is that Aurora's errand, to demand honours which she may have earned. Bereft of my Memnon I come, who bore brave arms (though all in vain) in his uncle's service, and in his early years has fallen by Achilles' warlike hand (for so you willed it). Grant then, I beg, some honour to him as solace for his death, O most high ruler of the gods, and soothe a mother's wounded heart." Jove nodded his consent, when Memnon's lofty pyre, wrapped in high-leaping flames, crumbled to earth, and the day was darkened by the thick black smoke, as when rivers send forth the fogs they have begotten, beneath whose pall the sunlight cannot come. Dark ashes whirled aloft and there, packed and condensed, they seemed to take on form, drew heat and vitality from the fire. (Its own lightness gave it wings.) At first, 'twas like a bird; but soon, a real bird, it flew about on whirring pinions. And along with it were countless sisters winging their noisy flight; and all were sprung from the same source.
terque rogum lustrant, et consonus exit in auras. 610 ter plangor, quarto seducunt castra volatu; tum duo diversa populi de parte fereces bella gerunt rostrisque et aduncis unguibus iras exercet alasque adversaque pectora lassant, inferiaeque cadunt cineri cognata sepulto 615 corpora seque viro forti meminere creatas.
praepetibus subitis nomen facit auctor: ab illo Memnonides dictae, cum sol duodena perexit signa, parentali moriturae more rebellant.— ergo aliis latrasse Dymantida flebile visum est; 620 luctibus est Aurora suis intenta piaseque nunc quoque dat lacrimas et toto rorat in orbe.

Non tamen eversam Troiae cum moenibus esse spem quoque fata sinunt: sacra et, sacra altera, patrem
fert umeris, venerabile onus, Cythereius heros. 625 de tantis opibus praedam pius eligit illam Ascaniumque suum profugaque per aequora classe fertur ab Antandro scelerataque limina Thracum et Polydoreo manantem sanguine terram linquit et utilibus ventis aestuque secundo 630 intrat Apollineam sociis comitantibus urbem.
hunc Anius, quo rege homines, antistite Phoebus rite colebatur, temploque domoque recepit urbemque ostendit delubraque nota duasque Latona quondam stirpes pariente retentas. 635 ture dato flammis vinoque in tura profuso caesarumque boum fibris de more crematis 272
Thrice round the pyre they flew and thrice their united clamour rose into the air. At the fourth flight the flock divided and in two warring bands the fierce contestants fought together, plying beak and hooked talons in their rage, wearying wing and breast in the struggle. At last these shapes kin to the buried ashes fell down as funeral offerings and remembered that they were sprung from that brave hero. The author of their being gave his name to the new-sprung birds, and they were called Memnonides from him; and still, when the sun has completed the circuit of his twelve signs, they fight and die again in honour of their father’s festival. And so others wept while the daughter of Dymas bayed; but Aurora was all absorbed in her own grief; and even to this day she weeps pious tears and bedews the whole world with them.

And yet the fates did not permit Troy’s hopes to perish with her walls. The heroic son \(^1\) of Cytherea bore away upon his shoulders her sacred images and, another sacred thing, his father, a venerable burden. Of all his great possessions, the pious hero chose that portion, and his son, Ascanius. Then with his fleet of refugees he set sail from Antandros, left behind the sinful homes of Thrace and the land dripping with Polydorus’ blood, and, with favouring winds and tides assisting, reached with his accompanying friends the city \(^2\) of Apollo. Him Anius, who ruled over men as king and served Phoebus as his priest, received in the temple and his home. He showed his city, the new-erected shrines and the two sacred trees \(^3\) beneath which Latona had once brought forth her children. There they burned incense in the flames, poured out wine upon the incense and, according

---

1 Aeneas. 2 In Delos. 3 See vi. 335.
regia tecta petunt, positisque tapetibus altis munera cum liquido capiunt Cerealia Baccho.
tum pius Anchises: "o Phoebi lecte sacerdos, fallor, an et natum, cum primum haec moenia vidi, bisque duas natas, quantum reminisco, habebas?"

huic Anius niveis circumdata tempora vittis concutiens et tristis ait: "non falleris, heros maxime; vidisti natorum quinque parentem, quam nunc (tanta homines rerum inconstantia versat) paene vides orbum. quod enim mihi filius absens auxilium, quem dicta suo de nomine tellus Andros habet pro patre locumque et regna tenentem?
Delius augurium dedit huic, dedit altera Liber femineae stirpi voto maiora fideque munera: nam tactu natarum cuncta mearum in segetem laticemque meri canaeque Minervae transformabantur, divesque erat usus in illis.
hoc ubi cognovit Troiae populator Atrides, (ne non ex aliqua vestram sensisse procellam nos quoque parte putes), armorum viribus usus abstrahit invitas gremio genitoris alantque imperat Argolicam caelesti munere classem.
effugiunt, quo quaeque potest: Euboea duabus et totidem natis Andros fraterna petita est.
miles adest et, ni deductur, bella minatur:
victa metu pietas consortia corpora poenae dedidit; et timido possis ignoscere fratri:
non hic Aeneas, non, qui defenderet Andron, Hector erat, per quem decimum durastis in annum.
to the customary rite, they slaughtered cattle and burned their entrails in the altar-fire; then sought the palace-hall and, reclining on the high couches, they partook of Ceres’ bounty and the wine of Bacchus. Then pious Anchises said: “O chosen priest of Phoebus, am I mistaken, or did you have, when first I saw your city, a son and four daughters as I recall?” And Anius, shaking his head bound with snowy fillets, sadly replied: “No, mightiest of heroes, you are not mistaken; you did see me the father of five children, whom now, such is the shifting nature of men’s fates, you see well-nigh bereft. For of what help to me is my absent son, whom the land of Andros, named from him, holds in place of his father; for he rules the land as king. The Delian gave him the power of augury; but to my daughters Bacchus gave other gifts, greater than they could pray or hope to gain. For at my daughters’ touch all things were turned to corn and wine and the oil of grey-green Minerva, and there was rich profit in them. When Agamemnon, ravager of Troy, learned this (that you may know that we also have felt some share of your destructive storm), using armed force, he dragged my unwilling daughters from their father’s arms, and bade them feed the Grecian army with their heavenly gift. They escaped, each as she could. Two sought Euboea; two fled to their brother’s Andros. Armed bands pursued and threatened war unless they were surrendered. Fear conquered brotherly affection, and he gave up to punishment the persons of his kindred. And you could forgive the timid brother; for Aeneas was not here to succour Andros, nor Hector, through whom you held your own for ten years. And now they

1 i.e. olives.
iamque parabantur captivis vincla lacertis:
illae tollentes etiamnum libera caelo bracchia 'Bacche pater, fer opem!' dixeret, tulitque muneris auctor opem,—si miro perdere more 670 ferre vocatur opem, nec qua ratione figuram perdiderint, potui scire aut nunc dicere possum; summa mali nota est: pennas sumpsere tuaeque coniugis in volucres, niveas abiere columbas.'

Talibus atque aliis postquam convivia dictis 675 inplerunt, mensa somnum petiere remotas cumque die surgunt adeuntque oracula Phoebi, qui petere antiquam matrem cognataque iussit litora; prosequitur rex et dat munus ituris, Anchisae sceptrum, chlamydem pharetramque nepotis,
cratera Aeneae, quem quondam transtulit illi hospes ab Aoniis Therses Isnienius oris:
miserat hunc illi Therses, fabricaverat Alcon Hyleus et longo caelaverat argumento.
urbs erat, et septem posses ostendere portas: 685 hae pro nomine erant, et quae foret illa, docebant;
anteb urbem exequiae tumulique ignesque pyraeque effusaeque comas et apertae pectora matres significant luctum; nymphae quoque flere videntur siccatosque queri fontes: sine frondibus arbor 690 nuda riget, rodunt arientia saxa capellae.
ecce facit mediis natas Orione Thebis hanc non femineum iugulo dare vulnus aperto, illas demisso per inertia vulnera telo

276
were preparing fetters for the captives' arms, when they, stretching their still free arms to heaven, cried: 'O father Bacchus, help!' And he who gave their gift did bring them aid—if you call it aid, in some strange sort to lose their human form. For never did I know, nor can I now describe, how they lost it. But the outcome of my sad mishap I do know: covered with plumage, they were changed to snow-white doves, your consort's birds.'

With such and other themes they filled up the feast, then left the banquet board and retired to rest; and on the morrow they rose and sought the oracle of Phoebus. He bade them seek their ancient mother and kindred shores. On their departure the king went forth with them and gave them parting gifts: a sceptre to Anchises, a robe and quiver to his grandson, and a goblet to Aeneas which Ismenian Therses, a guest, had once brought to the king from the Aonian coast. Therses had sent him the cup, but 'twas the handiwork of Hylean Alcon, who had engraved upon it a long pictured story. There was a city, on which you could discern seven gates. These served to name it and tell you what it was. Before the city funeral rites were seen, with sepulchres and blazing funeral pyres; and women with dishevelled hair and naked breasts, proclaiming grief. Nymphs also seemed to weep and bewail their dried-up springs. The trees stood bare and leafless; goats nibbled in the parched and stony fields. See, in the Theban streets he represents Orion's daughters, one dealing a wound not apt for maiden's hands to her bared throat, the other dealing clumsy wounds with her weaving-shuttle, both falling as victims in the people's stead; then borne in funeral pomp through

1 i.e. Thebes.
pro populo cecidisse suo pulchrisque per urbem funeribus ferri celebrique in parte cremari.
tum de virginea geminos exire favilla, ne genus intereat, iuvenes, quos fama Coronos nominat, et cineri materno ducere pomam.
hactenus antiquo signis fulgentibus aere, summus inaurato crater erat asper acantho.
nec leviora datis Troiani dona remittunt dantque sacerdoti custodem turis acerram, dant pateram claramque auro gemmisque coronam.

Inde recordati Teucros a sanguine Teucri ducere principium, Cretam tenuere locique ferre diu nequiere Iovem centumque relictis urbibus Ausonios optant contingere portus, saevit hiems iactaque viros, Strophadumque receptos portubus infidis exterruit ales Aello.
et iam Dulichios portus Ithacamque Samonque Neritiasque domus, regnum fallacis Ulixis, praeter erant vecti: certatam lite deorum Ambraciam versique vident sub imagine saxum iudicis, Actiaco quae nunc ab Apolline nota est, vocalemque sua terram Dodonida quercu Chaoniosque sinus, ubi nati rege Molosso inpia subiectis fugere incendia pennis.

Proxima Phaeacum felicibus obsita pomis rura petunt, Epiros ab his regnataque vati Buthrotos Phrygio simulataque Troia tenetur; inde futurorum certi, quae cuncta fidelis
the town and burned to ashes midst the mourning throngs. Then, that their race may not perish with them, from their virgin ashes spring two youths, whom fame has named Coroni. These join in the solemn rites due to their mother’s dust. Such was the story told in figures gleaming on the antique bronze. Round the goblet’s top, rough-carved, golden acanthus ran. The Trojans make presents in return of no less worth: an incense-casket for the priest, a libation-saucer and a crown, gleaming with gems and gold.

Thence, remembering that the Teucrians sprang from Teucer’s stock, they sailed away to Crete. Here, unable to endure for long the climate of the place, they abandoned Crete with its hundred cities and set out with eager spirit for the Ausonian shores. The wintry seas raged and tossed the heroic band; and, when they came to the treacherous harbour of the Strophades, Aëllo, the harpy, frightened them. And now Dulichium’s anchorage, Ithaca and Samos, the homes of Neritos, the false Ulysses’ kingdom—past all these they sailed. Ambracia next, once object of heaven’s strife, they saw, and the image of the judge once changed to stone—Ambracia, now famed for Actian Apollo’s sake; Dodona’s land, with its speaking oaks; Chaonia’s sheltered bay, where the sons of King Molossus on new-grown wings escaped impious fires.

Next they sought the land of the Phaeacians, set with fertile orchards, and landed at Buthrotos in Epirus with its mimic Troy, a city ruled by the Phrygian seer. There having learned all that awaited them from the friendly prophecies of Helenus, 1 This, in accordance with their interpretation of the advice given in l. 678.
Priamides Helenus monitu praedixerat, intrant Sicaniam: tribus haec excurrit in aequora pennis, e quibus imbriferos est versa Pachynos ad austros, 725 mollibus expositum zephyris Lilybaeon, at arctos aequoris expertes spectat boreamque Peloros.
hac subeunt Teucri, et remis aestuque secundo sub noctem potitur Zanclaee classis harena: Scylla latus dextrum, laevum inrequieta Charybdis 730 infestat; vorat haec raptas revomitque carinas, illa feris atram canibus succingitur alvum, virginis ora gerens, et, si non omnia vates ficta reliquerunt, aliquo quoque tempore virgo:
hanc multi petiere proci, quibus illa repulsis 735
ad pelagi nymphas, pelagi gratissima nymphis, ibat et elusos iuvenum narrabat amores.
cui dum pectendos praebet Galatea capillos, talibus adloquitur repetens suspiria dictis:
"te tamen, o virgo, genus haut inmite virorum 740 expetit, utque facis, potes his inpune negare;
at mihi, cui pater est Nereus, quam caerula Doris enixa est, quae sum turba quoque tuta sororum, non nisi per luctus licuit Cyclopis amorem effugere." et lacrimae vocem impediere loquentis. 745 quas ubi marmoreo detersit pollice virgo et solata deam est, "refer, o carissima" dixit
"neve tui causam tege (sic sum fida) doloris!" Nereis his contra resecuta Crataeide natam est:
"Acis erat f'auno nymphaque Symaethide cretus 750 magna quidem patrisque sui matrisque voluptas, nostra tamen maior; nam me sibi iunxerat uni.
pulcher et octonis iterum natalibus actis signarat teneras dubia lanugine malas.
280
Priam's son, they came to Sicily. This land runs out into the sea in three capes. Of these, Pachynos faces to the rainy south, Lilybaeon feels the soft western breeze, and Peloros looks to the northern Bears, who never go beneath the sea. Hither the Teucri came and with oars and favouring tides the fleet reached the sandy beach of Zancle as darkness fell. Scylla infests the right-hand coast, unresting Charybdis the left. The one sucks down and vomits forth again the ships she has caught; the other's uncanny waist is girt with ravening dogs. She has a virgin's face and, if all the tales of poets are not false, she was herself once a virgin. Many suitors sought her; but she scorned them all and, taking refuge with the sea-nymphs (for the sea-nymphs loved her well), she would tell them of the disappointed wooing of her lovers. • There once Galatea, while she let the maiden comb her hair, first sighing deeply, thus addressed her: "You truly, maiden, are wooed by a gentle race of men, and you can repulse them without fear, even as you do. But I, whose father is Nereus and whose mother the sea-hued Doris, who am safe also in a throng of sisters, I was not allowed to shun the Cyclops' love without grievous consequence." Tears checked her further speech. When the maid with her white fingers had dried the goddess' tears and had consoled her, she said: "Tell me, O dearest one, and do not conceal the cause of your woe, for I am faithful to you." And the Nereid answered Crataeis' daughter in these words: "Acis was son of Faunus and the nymph Symaethis, great joy to his father and his mother, but greater joy to me; for he loved me with whole-hearted love. Beautiful he was, and his sixteenth birthday past, a faint down had marked his youthful cheeks. Him dic hunc ego, me Cyclops nulla cum fine petebat. 755 nec, si quaesieris, odium Cyclopis amorne Acidis in nobis fuerit praesentior, edam:
par utrumque fuit.  pro! quanta potentia regni est, Venus alma, tui! nempe ille inmitis et ipsis horrendus silvis et visus ab hospite nullo inpune et magni cum dis contemptor Olympi, quid sit amor, sensit validaque cupidine captus uritur oblitus pecorum antrorumque suorum.
iamque tibi formae, iamque est tibi cura placendi, iam rigidos pectis rastris, Polypheme, capillos, iam libet hirsutam tibi falce recidere barbam et spectare feros in aqua et conponere vultus.
caedis amor feritasque sitisque inmensa cruoris cessant, et tutae veniuntque abeuntque carinae.
Telemus interea Siculam delatus ad Aetnen, Telemus Eurymides, quem nulla fefellerat ales, terribilem Polyphemon adit 'lumen' que, 'quod unum fronte geris media, rapiet tibi' dixit 'Ulixes.'
risit et 'o vatum stolidissime, falleris,' inquit,
'altera iam rapuit.' sic frustra vera momentem spernit et aut gradiens ingenti litora passu degravat, aut fessus sub opaca revertitur antra.
prominet in pontum cuneatus acumine longo collis (utrumque latus circumfluit aequoris unda):
huc ferus adscendit Cyclops mediusque resedit;
lanigerae pecudes nullo ducente secutae.
cui postquam pinus, baculi quae praebuit usum, ante pedes posita est antemnis apta ferendis sumptaque harundinibus compacta est fistula centum, senserunt toti pastoria sibila montes,
I love, but the Cyclops loved me with endless wooing. Nor, if you should ask me, could I tell which was stronger in me, my hate of Cyclops or my love of Acis; for both were in equal measure. O mother Venus, how mighty is thy sway! Behold, that savage creature, whom the very woods shudder to look upon, whom no stranger has ever seen save to his own hurt, who despises great Olympus and its gods, he feels the power of love and burns with mighty desire, forgetful of his flocks and of his caves. And now, Polyphemus, you become careful of your appearance, now anxious to please; now with a rake you comb your shaggy locks, and now it is your pleasure to cut your rough beard with a reaping-hook, gazing at your rude features in some clear pool and composing their expression. Your love of slaughter falls away, your fierce nature and your quenchless thirst for blood; and ships come and go in safety. Meanwhile Telemus had come to Sicilian Aetna, Telemus, the son of Eurymus, whom no bird had deceived; and he said to grim Polyphemus: 'That one eye, which you have in the middle of your forehead, Ulysses will take from you.' He mocked and answered: 'O most stupid seer, you are wrong; another has already taken it.' Thus did he scoff at the man who vainly sought to warn him, and stalked with huge, heavy tread along the shore, or returned, weary, to his shady cave. A wedge-shaped promontory with long, sharp point juts out into the sea, both sides washed by the waves. Hither the fierce Cyclops climbed and sat down on the cliff's central point, and his woolly sheep, all unheeded, followed him. Then, laying at his feet the pine-trunk which served him for a staff, fit for a vessel's mast, he took his pipe made of a hundred reeds. All the mountains felt the sound of his rustic pipings; the waves felt it too. I, hiding senserunt undae; latitans ego rupe meique Acidis in gremio residens procul auribus hausit alia dicta meis auditaque verba notavi:

"Candidior folio nivei Galatea ligustri, floridior pratis, longa procerior alno, 790 splendidior vitro, tencro lascivior haedo, levior adsiduo detritis aequore conchis, solibus hibernis, aestiva gratior umbra, nobilior pomis, platano conspectior alta, lucidior glacie, matura dulcior uva, 795
mollior et cygni plumis et lacte coacto, et si non fugias, riguo formosior horto;

"Saevior indomitis eadem Galatea iuvenis, durior annosa quercu, fallacior undis, lentior et salicis virgis et vitibus albis, 800
his immobiliior scopulis, violentior amne, laudato pavone superbior, acrior igni, asperior tribulis, feta truculentior ursa, surdior aequoribus, calcato inmitior hydro, et, quod praecipue vellem tibi demere possem, 805
non tantum cervo claris latratibus acto, verum etiam ventis volucrique fugacior aura, (at bene si noris, pigeat fugisse, morasque ipsa tuas damnes et me retinere labores).
sunt mihi, pars montis, vivo pendentia saxo 810
antra, quibus nec sol medio sentitur in aestu, nec sentitur hiems; sunt poma gravantia ramos, sunt auro similis longis in vitibus uvae, sunt et purpureae: tibi et has servamus et illas.
284
beneath a rock and resting in my Acis' arms, at a great distance heard the words he sang and well remember them:

"O Galatea, whiter than snowy privet-leaves, more blooming than the meadows, surpassing the alder in your tall slenderness, more sparkling than crystal, more frolicsome than a tender kid, smoother than shells worn by the constant waves, more welcome than the winter's sun and summer's shade, more goodly than orchard-fruit, fairer than the tall plane-tree, more shining-clear than ice, sweeter than ripened grapes, softer than swan's down and curdled milk, and, if only you would not flee from me, more beauteous than a well-watered garden.

"Yet you, the same Galatea, are more obstinate than an untamed heifer, harder than aged oak, falser than water, tougher than willow-twigs and white briony-vines, more immovable than these rocks, more boisterous than a stream, vainer than a praised peacock, more cruel than fire, sharper than thorns, more savage than a she-bear with young, deafer than the sea, more pitiless than a trodden snake, and, what I would most of all that I could take from you, swifter not only than the stag driven before the baying hounds, but also than the winds and the fleeting breeze! But, if only you knew me well, you would regret that you have fled from me; you would yourself condemn your coy delays and seek to hold me. I have a whole mountain-side for my possessions, deep caves in the living rock, where neither the sun is felt in his midsummer heat, nor the winter's cold. I have apples weighing down their branches, grapes yellow as gold on the trailing vines, and purple grapes as well. Both these and those I am keeping for your use. With your own hand you ipsa tuis manibus silvestri nata sub umbra mollia fraga leges, ipsa autumnalia corna prunaque non solum nigro liventia suco, verum etiam generosa novasque imitantia ceras.
nec tibi castaneae me coniuge, nec tibi deerunt arbutei fetus: omnis tibi serviet arbor.

"Hoc pecus omne meum est, multae quoque vallibus errant, multas aliqua tegit, multae stabulantur in antris, nec, si forte roges, possim tibi dicere, quot sint:
pauperis est numerare pecus; de laudibus harum nil mihi credideris, praesens potes ipsa videre, ut vix circumeant distinctum cruribus uber.

sunt, fetura minor, tepidis in ovilibus agni.
sunt quoque, par aetas, aliis in ovilibus haedi.
lac mihi semper adest niveum: pars inde bibenda servatur, partem liquefacta coagula durant.

"Nec tibi deliciae faciles vulgataque tantum munera contingent, dammae leporesque caperque, parve columbarum demptusve cacumine nidus:
inveni geminos, qui tecum ludere possint, inter se similis, vix ut dignoscere possis, villosae catulos in summis montibus ursae:

inveni et dixi "dominae servabimus istos."

"Iam modo caeruleo nitidum caput exere ponto, iam, Galatea, veni, nec munera despice nostra!
certe ego me novi liquidaeque in imagine vidi nuper aquae, placuitque mihi mea forma videnti.
adspice, sim quantus: non est hoc corpore maior Iuppiter in caelo, nam vos narrare soletis nescio quem regnare Ioem; coma plurima torvos shall gather the luscious strawberries that grow within the woody shade, cherries in autumn-time and plums, both juicy and purple-black and the large yellow kind, yellow as new wax. Chestnuts also shall be yours and the fruit of the arbute-tree, if you will take me for your husband; and every tree shall yield to your desire.

"And all this flock is mine. Many besides are wandering in the valleys, many are in the woods, still others are safe within their cavern-folds. Nay, should you chance to ask, I could not tell you how many in all I have. 'Tis a poor man's business to count his flocks. And you need not believe my praises of them; here you can see for yourself how they can hardly walk for their distended udders. And I have, coming on, lambs in my warm folds and kids, too, of equal age, in other folds. There's always a plenty of snow-white milk. Some of it is kept for drinking, and some the rennet hardens into curds.

"And you shall have no easily gotten pets or only common presents, such as does and hares and goats, or a pair of doves, or a nest taken from the cliff. I found on the mountain-top two cubs of a shaggy bear for you to play with, so much alike that you can scarcely tell them apart. I found them and I said: "I'll keep these for my mistress!"

"And now, Galatea, do but raise your glistening head from the blue sea. Now come and don't despise my gifts. Surely I know myself; lately I saw my reflection in a clear pool, and I liked my features when I saw them. Just look, how big I am! Jupiter himself up there in the sky has no bigger body; for you are always talking of some Jove or other as ruling there. A wealth of hair
OVID

prominet in vultus, umerosque, ut lucus, obumbrat; nec mea quod rigidis horrent densissima saetis corpora, turpe puta: turpis sine frondibus arbor, turpis equus, nisi colla iubae flaventia velent; pluma tegit volucres, ovibus sua lana decori est: barba viros hirtaeque decent in corpore saetae. unum est in media lumen mihi fronte, sed instar ingentis clipei. quid? non haec omnia magnus Sol videt e caelo? Soli tamen unicus orbis.

"'Adde, quod in vestro genitor meus aequore regnat:
hunc tibi do socerum; tantum miserere precesque supplicis exaudi! tibi enim succumbimus uni, quique Iovem et caelum sperno et penetrabile fulmen, Nerei, te vereor, tua fulmine saevior ira est. atque ego contemptus essem patientior huius, si fugeres omnes; sed cur Cyclope repulso Acin amas praefersque meis conplexibus ille tamen placeatque sibi placeatque licebit, quod nollem, Galatea, tibi; modo copia detur: sentiet esse mihi tanto pro corpore vires! viscera viva traham divulsaque membra per agros perque tuas spargam (sic se tibi misceat !) undas. uror enim, laesusque exaestuat acrius ignis, cumque suis videor translatam viribus Aetnam pectore ferre meo, nec tu, Galatea, moveris.'

"Talia nequiquam questus (nam cuncta videbam) surgit et ut taurus vacca furibundus adempta stare nequit silvaque et notis saltibus errat, overhangs my manly face and it shades my shoulders like a grove. And don't think it ugly that my whole body is covered with thick, bristling hair. A tree is ugly without its leaves and a horse is ugly if a thick mane does not clothe his sorrel neck; feathers clothe the birds, and their own wool is becoming to sheep; so a beard and shaggy hair on his body well become a man. True, I have but one eye in the middle of my forehead, but it is as big as a good-sized shield. And what of that? Doesn't the great sun see everything here on earth from his heavens? And the sun has but one eye.

"Furthermore, my father is king over your own waters; and him I am giving to you for father-in-law. Only pity me and listen to my humble prayer; for I bow to you alone; I, who scorn Jove and his heaven and his all-piercing thunderbolt, I fear you alone, O Nereid; your anger is more deadly than the lightning-flash. And I could better bear your scorning if you fled from all your suitors. But why, though you reject Cyclops, do you love Acis, and why do you prefer Acis to my arms? And yet he may please himself and please you too, Galatea; but oh, I wish he didn't please you. But only let me have a chance at him! Then he'll find that I am as strong as I am big. I'll tear his vitals out alive, I'll rend him limb from limb and scatter the pieces over the fields and over your waves—so may he mate with you! For oh, I burn, and my hot passion, thus scorned, rages more fiercely within me; I seem to carry Aetna in my breast, borne thither with all his violence. And you, Galatea, do not care at all."

"Such vain complaints he uttered, and rose up (I saw it all), just as a bull which, furious when the cow has been taken from him, cannot stand still, but cum feras ignaros nec quicquam tale timentes me videt atque Acin 'video' que exclamat 'et ista ultima sit, faciam, Veneris concordia vestrae.' tantaque vox, quantam Cyclops iratus habere debuit, illa fuit: clamore perhorruit Aetne.
ast ego vicino pavefacta sub aequore mergor;
terga fugae dederat conversa Symaethius heros et 'ser ope, Galatea, precor, mihi ! ferte, parentes,' dixerat 'et vestris periturum admittite regnis!' innequitur Cyclops partemque e monte revulsam mittit, et extremus quamvis pervenit ad illum angulus e saxo, totum tamen obrruit Acin.
at nos, quod fieri solum per fata licebat, fecimus, ut vires adsumeret Acis avitas. puniceus de mole crur manabat, et intra temoris exiguum rubor evanescere coepit, fitque color primo turbati fluminis imbre purgaturque mora; tum moles iacta dehiscit, vivaque per rimas proceraque surgit harundo, que cavum saxi sonat exsultantibus undis, miraque res, subito media tenus exstitit alvo incinctus iuvenis flexis nova cornua cannis, qu, nisi quod maior, quod toto caerulus ore, Acis erat, sed sic quoque erat tamen Acis, in amnem versus, et antiquum tenuerunt flumina nomen.' Desierat Galatea loqui, coetuque soluto discedunt placidisque natant Nereides undis.
Scylla redit; neque enim medio se credere ponto audet, et aut bibula sine vestibus errat harena wanders through the woods and familiar pasturelands. Then the fierce giant spied me and Acis, neither knowing nor fearing such a fate, and he cried: 'I see you, and I'll make that union of your loves the last.' His voice was big and terrible as a furious Cyclops' voice should be. Aetna trembled with the din of it. But I, in panic fright, dived into the near-by sea. My Symaethian hero had already turned to run, and cried: 'Oh, help me, Galatea, I pray; help me, my parents, and take me, doomed now to perish, to your kingdom. Cyclops ran after him and hurled a piece wrenched from the mountainside; and, though that merest corner of the mass reached Acis, still it was enough to bury him altogether. But I (the only thing that fate allowed to me) caused Acis to assume his ancestral powers. Crimson blood came trickling from beneath the mass; then in a little while its ruddy colour began to fade away and it became the colour of a stream swollen by the early rains, and it cleared entirely in a little while. Then the mass that had been thrown cracked wide open and a tall, green reed sprang up through the crack, and the hollow opening in the rock resounded with leaping waters, and, wonderful! suddenly a youth stood forth waist-deep from the water, his new-sprung horns wreathed with bending rushes. The youth, save that he was larger and his face of dark sea-blue, was Acis. But even so he still was Acis, changed to a river-god; and his waters kept their former name.'

When Galatea had finished her story, the group of Nereids broke up and went swimming away on the peaceful waves. But Scylla, not daring to trust herself to the outer deep, returned to the shore, and there either wandered all unrobed along aut, ubi lassata est, seductos nacta recessus gurgitis, inclusa sua membra refrigerat unda ecce freto stridens, alti novus incola ponti, nuper in Euboica versis Anthedone membris, Glaucus adest, visaeque cupidine virginis haeret et, quaecumque putat fugientem posse morari, verba refert; fugit illa tamen veloxque timore pervenit in summum positi prope litora montis.
ante fretum est ingens, apicem conlectus in unum longa sub arboribus convexus in aequora vertex:
constitit hic et tuta loco, monstrumne deusne ille sit, ignorans admiraturque colorem caesariemque umeros subjectaque terga tegentem, ultimaque excipiat quod tortilis inguina piscis.
sensit et innitens, quae stabat proxima, moli
"non ego prodigium nec sum fera belua, virgo, sed deus" inquit "aqua: nec maius in aequora Proteus ius habet et Triton Athamantiadesque Palaemon.
ante tamen mortalis eram, sed, scilicet altis deditus aequoribus, tantum exercerbar in illis;
nam modo ducebam ducentia retia pisces, nunc in mole sedens moderabar harundine linum.
sunt viridi prato confinia litora, quorum altera pars undis, pars altera cingitur herbis, quas neque cornigerae morsu laesere iuvencae, nec placidae carpsistis oves hirtaeve capellae;
non apis inde tulit conlectos sedula1 flores,

1 So Vulg. Ehwald conjectures semina ; Merkel semine.
292
the thirsty sands or, when she was wearied, she would seek out some deep sequestered pool and there refresh her limbs in its safe waters. Behold Glaucus, sounding with his shell upon the sea, a new-come dweller in the deep waters; for his form had been but lately changed near Anthedon in Euboea. He saw the maid and straightway burned with love, and said whatever things he thought might stay her flight. Nevertheless, she fled him and, her speed increased by fear, she came to the top of a mountain which stood near the shore. It was a huge mountain facing the sea, rising into one massive peak, its shady top reaching far out over the water. Here Scylla stayed her flight and, protected by her position, not knowing whether he was a monster or a god, looked in wonder at his colour, his hair which covered his shoulders and his back, and at his groins merging into a twisted fish-form. He saw her and, leaning on a mass of rock which lay at hand, he said: "Maiden, I am no monster or wild creature; I am a sea-god; and neither Proteus nor Triton nor Palaemon, son of Athamas, has greater power over the deeps than I. I was mortal once, but even then devoted to the sea, and there my life was spent. Now I would draw in the nets full of fish, and now, sitting on some projecting rock, I would ply rod and line. There is a shore fringed by verdant meadows, one side of which is hemmed in by the waves and the other by herbage, which neither horned cattle have ever disturbed in grazing nor have your peaceful sheep nor hairy she-goats cropped it. No busy bee ever gathered flowers ¹ from there

¹ i.e. either the honey from the flowers, or, according to Aristotle (de An. Hist., V. xxii. 4), the flowers themselves, out of which the bees made the honeycombs.
non data sunt capiti genalia serta, neque umquam falciferae secuere manus; ego primus in illo caespite consedi, dum lina madentia sicco, utque recenserem captivos ordine pisces, insuper exposui, quos aut in retia casus aut sua credulitas in aduncos egerat hamos, res similis fictae, sed quid mihi fingere prodest? gramine contacto coepit mea praeda moveri et mutare latus terraque ut in aequore niti. dumque moror mirorque simul, fugit omnis in undas turba suas dominumque novum litusque relinquunt. obstipui dubitoque diu causamque requiro, num deus hoc aliquis, num sucus fecerit herbae: 'quae tamen has' inquam 'vires habet herba?' manuque pabula decerpsi decerptaque dente momordi. vix bene conbiberant ignotos guttura sucos, cum subito trepidare intus praccordia sensi alteriusque rapi naturae pectus amore; nec potui restare diu 'repetenda' que 'numquam terra, vale!' dixi corpusque sub aequora mersi. di maris exceptum socio dignantur honore, utque mihi, quaecumque feram, mortalia demant, Oceanum Tethynque rogant: ego lustror ab illis, et purgante nefas noviens mihi carmine dicto pectora fluminibus iubeor supponere centum; nec mora, diversis lapsi de partibus amnes totaque vertuntur supra caput aequora nostrum. hactenus acta tibi possum memoranda referre, hactenus haec memini, nec mens mea cetera sensit. quae postquam reidiit, alium me corpore toto, and bore them off; no festal wreaths for the head were ever gathered there, no hands with sickles ever mowed its grasses. I was the first to seat me on that turf, drying my dripping lines and spreading out upon the bank to count them the fish that I had caught, which either chance had brought to my nets or their own guilelessness had fixed upon my hooks. It sounds like an idle tale; but what advantage have I in deceiving you? My catch, on touching the grass, began to stir, then to turn over and to move about on land as in the sea. And while I paused in wonder they all slipped down into their native waters, abandoning their new master and the shore. I stood a long time in amaze and doubt, seeking the cause of this. Had some god done it, or was it the grasses' juice? 'And yet what herb could have such potency?' I said, and plucking some of the herbage with my hands, I chewed what I had plucked. Scarce had I swallowed the strange juices when suddenly I felt my heart trembling within me, and my whole being yearned with desire for another element. Unable long to stand against it, I cried aloud: 'Farewell, O Earth, to which I shall nevermore return!' and I plunged into the sea. The sea-divinities received me, deeming me worthy of a place with them, and called on Oceanus and Tethys to purge my mortal nature all away. And then they purged me, first with a magic song nine times repeated to wash all evil from me, and next they bade me bathe my body in a hundred streams. Straightway the rivers that flow from every side poured all their waters upon my head. So far I can recall and tell you what befell me; so far can I remember. But of the rest my mind retains no knowledge. When my senses came back to me I was far different from what I was but lately in all ovrD

ac fueram nuper, neque eundem mente recepi:
hanc ego tum primum viridi ferrugine barbam caesariemque meam, quam longa per aequora verro ingentesque umeros et caerula bracchia vidi cruraque pinnigero curvata novissima pisce.
quid tamen haec species, quid dis placuisse marinis, quid iuvat esse deum, si tu non tangeris istis?"
talia dicentem, dicturum plura, reliquit Scylla deum; furit ille inritatusque repulsa prodigiosa petit Titanidos atria Circes.
my body, nor was my mind the same. Then for the first time I beheld this beard of dark green hue, these locks which I sweep on the long waves, these huge shoulders and bluish arms, these legs which twist and vanish in a finny fish. And yet, what boots this form, what, that I pleased the sea-divinities, what profits it to be a god, if you are not moved by these things?" As he thus spoke and would have spoken more, Scylla fled from the god, and he, stung to mad rage by his repulse, betook him to the wondrous court of Circe, daughter of the Sun.
BOOK XIV
IAMQVE Giganteis iniectam faucibus Aetnen arvaque Cyclopum, quid rastra, quid usus aratri nescia nec quicquam iunctis debentia bubus liquerat Euboicus tumidarum cultor aquarum, liquerat et Zanclen adversaque moenia Regi navifragumque fretum, gemino quod litore pressum Ausoniae Siculaeque tenet confinia terrae.
inde manu magna Tyrrhena per aequora vectus herbiferos adiit colles atque atria Glaucus Sole satae Circes, vanarum plena ferarum.
quam simul adspexit, dicta acceptaque salute,
"diva, dei miserere, precor! nam sola levare tu potes hunc," dixit "videar modo dignus, amorem.
quanta sit herbarum, Titani, potentia, nulli quam mihi cognitius, qui sum mutatus ab illis.
neve mei non nota tibi sit causa furoris:
litore in Italico, Messenia moenia contra, Scylla mihi visa est. pudor est promissa precesque blanditiasque meas contemptaque verba referre;
at tu, sive aliquid regni est in carmine, carmen ore move sacro, sive expugnacior herba est, utere temptatis operosae viribus herbae nec medeare mihi sanesque haec vulnera mando,
And now Aetna, heaped upon the giant’s head, \(^1\) and the fields of the Cyclops, which knew naught of the harrow or the plow, which owed no debt to yoked cattle, all these the Euboean haunter of the swelling waves had left behind; he had left Zancle also, and the walls of Rhegium which lay opposite, and the shipwrecking strait which, confined by double shores, hems in the Ausonian and Sicilian land. Thence, swimming along with mighty strength through the Tyrrhene sea, Glaucus came to the herb-clad hills and the courts of Circe, daughter of the Sun, full of phantom beasts. When he beheld her, and a welcome had been given and received, he thus addressed the goddess: “O goddess, pity a god, I pray you! for you alone, if I but seem worthy of it, can help this love of mine. What magic potency herbs have, O Titaness, no one knows better than myself, for I was changed by them. That the cause of my mad passion may be known to you, on the Italian coast, opposite Messene’s walls, I saw Scylla. I am ashamed to tell of the promises and prayers, the coaxing words I used, all scornfully rejected. But do you, if there is any power in charms, sing a charm with your sacred lips; or, if herbs are more effectual, use the tried strength of efficacious herbs. And I do not pray that you cure me or heal me of these wounds, nor end my fineque nil opus est: partem ferat illa caloris."

\(^1\) See v. 346 ff
at Circe (neque enim flammis habet aptius ulla talibus ingenium, seu causa est huius in ipsa, seu Venus indicio facit hoc offensa paterno,) talia verba refert: "melius sequerere volentem optantemque eadem parilique cupidine captam. dignus eras ultro (poteras certeque) rogari, et, si spem dederis, mihi crede, rogaberis ultro. neu dubites adsitque tuae fiducia formae, en ego, cum dea sim, nitidi cum filia Solis, carmine cum tantum, tantum quoque gramine possess, ut tua sim, voveo. spernentem sperne, sequenti 35 redde vices, unoque duas uleiscere facto."
talia temptanti "prius" inquit "in aequore frondes" Glaucus "et in summis nascentur montibus algaes, sospite quam Scylla nostri mutentur amores." indignata dea est et laedere quatenus ipsum non poterat, (nec vellet amans), irascitur illi, quae sibi praelata est; venerisque offensa repulsa, protinus horrendis infamia pabula sucis conterit et tritis Hecateia carmina miscet caerulaque induit velamina perque ferarum agmen adulantum media procedit ab aula oppositumque petens contra Zancleia saxa Region ingreditur ferventes aestibus undas, in quibus ut solida ponit vestigia terra summaque decurrit pedibus super aequora siccis. parvus erat gurges, curvos sinuatus in arcus, grata quies Scyllae: quo se referebat ab aestu love; let her but bear her part of this burning heat." But Circe (for no one has a heart more susceptible to such flames than she, whether the cause of this is in herself, or whether Venus, offended by her father's tattling, made her so) replied: "Much better would you follow one whose strong desire and prayer was even as your own, whose heart burned with an equal flame. You were worthy on your own part to be wooed, and could be, of a truth; and, if you give some hope, I tell you truly you shall indeed be wooed. That you may believe this, and have some faith in your own power to charm, lo, I, goddess though I be, though the daughter of the shining Sun, though I have such magic powers in song and herb, I pray that I may be yours. Scorn her who scorns, and requite her love who loves you; and so in one act repay us both." But to her prayer Glaucus replied: "Sooner shall foliage grow on the sea, and sooner shall seaweeds spring up on the mountain-tops, than shall my love change while Scylla lives." The goddess was enraged; and, since she could not harm the god himself (and would not because of her love for him), she turned her wrath upon the girl who was preferred to her. In hurt anger at the refusal of her love, she straightway bruised together uncanny herbs with juices of dreadful power, singing while she mixed them Hecate's own charms. Then, donning an azure cloak, she took her way from her palace through the throng of beasts that fawned upon her as she passed, and made for Rhegium, lying opposite Zancle's rocky coast. She fared along the seething waters, on which she trod as on the solid ground, skimming dry-shod along the surface of the sea. There was a little pool, curving into a deep bow, a peaceful place where Scylla loved to come. Thither would she betake her et maris et caeli, medio cum plurimus orbe sol erat et minimas a vertice fecerat umbras.
hunc dea praevitiat portentificisque venenis inquinat; his fusis latices radice nocenti spargit et obscurum verborum ambage novorum ter noviens carmen magico demurmurat ore.
Scylla venit mediaque tenus descenderat alvo, cum sua foedari latrantibus inguina monstris adspicit ac primo credens non corporis illas esse sui partes, refugitque abigitque timetque ora proterva canum, sed quos fugit, attrahit una et corpus quaerens femorum erurumque pedumque Cerbereos rictus pro partibus invenit illis:
statque canum rabie subiectaque terga ferarum inguinibus truncis uteroque existante coercet.

Flevit amans Glaucus nimiumque hostiliter usae viribus herbarum fugit conubia Circees; Scylla loco mansit cumque est data copia, primum in Circeus odium sociis spoliavit Ulixen; mox eadem Teucras fuerat mensura carinas, ni prius in scopulum, qui nunc quoque saxeus exstat, transformata foret: scopulum quoque navita vitat.

Hunc ubi Troiana remis avidamque Charybdin evicere rates, cum iam prope litus adessent Ausonium, Libycas vento referuntur ad oras.
excipit Aenean illie animoque domoque non bene discidium Phrygii latura mariti

§04
from the heat of sea and sky, when the sun at his strongest was in mid-heaven, and from his zenith had drawn the shadows to their shortest compass. This pool, before the maiden’s coming, the goddess befouls and tinctures with her baleful poisons. When these had been poured out she sprinkles liquors brewed from noxious roots, and a charm, dark with its maze of uncanny words, thrice nine times she murmurs over with lips well skilled in magic. Then Scylla comes and wades waist-deep into the water; when all at once she sees her loins disfigured with barking monster-shapes. And at the first, not believing that these are parts of her own body, she flees in fear and tries to drive away the boisterous, barking things. But what she flees she takes along with her; and, feeling for her thighs, her legs, her feet, she finds in place of these only gaping dogs’ heads, such as a Cerberus might have. She stands on ravenous dogs, and her docked loins and her belly are enclosed in a circle of beastly forms.

Glaucus, her lover, wept at the sight and fled the embrace of Circe, who had used too cruelly her potent herbs. But Scylla remained fixed in her place and, when first a chance was given her to vent her hate on Circe, she robbed Ulysses of his companions. She also would have wrecked the Trojan ships had she not before their coming been changed into a rock which stands there to this day. The rock also is the sailors’ dread.

When the Trojan vessels had successfully passed this monster and greedy Charybdis too, and when they had almost reached the Ausonian shore, the wind bore them to the Libyan coast. There the Sidonian queen¹ received Aeneas hospitably in heart and home,

¹ Dido.
Sidonis; inque pyra sacri sub imagine facta incubuit ferro deceptaque decipit omnes. rursus harenosae fugiens nova moenia terrae ad sedemque Erycis fidumque relatus Acesten sacrificat tumulumque sui genitoris honorat. quasque rates Iris lunonia paene cremarat, solvit et Hippotadae regnum terrasque calenti sulphure fumantis Acheloiumque relinquuit Sirenum scopulos, orbataque praeside pinus Inarimen Prochytenque legit sterilique locatas colle Pithecusas, habitantum nomine dictas. quippe deum genitor, fraudem et periuria quondam Cercopum exosus gentisque admissa dolosae, in deforme viros animal mutavit, ut idem dissimiles homini possent similesque videri, membraque contraxit naresque a fronte resimas contudit et rugis peraravit anilibus ora totaque velatos flaventi corpora villo misit in has sedes nec non prius abstulit usum verborum et natae dira in periuria linguae; posse queri tantum rauco stridore reliquit.

Has ubi praeteriit et Parthenopeia dextra moenia deseruit, laeva de parte canori Aeolidae tumulum et, loca feta palustribus undis, litora Cumarum vivacisque antra Sibyllae intrat, et ad manes veniat per Averna paternos, orat. at illa diu vultum tellure moratum

306.
doomed ill to endure her Phrygian lord's departure On a pyre, built under pretence of sacred rites, she fell upon his sword; and so, herself disappointed, she disappointed all. Leaving once more the new city built on the sandy shore, Aeneas returned to the land of Eryx and friendly Acestes, and there he made sacifice and paid due honours to his father's tomb.
Then he cast off the ships which Iris, Juno's mesen-ger, had almost burned, and soon had sailed past the kingdom of Hippotades, past the lands smoking with hot sulphur fumes, and the rocky haunt of the Sirens, daughters of Acheloüs. And now, his vessel having lost her pilot, he coasts along Inarime and Prochyte and Pithecusae, situate on a barren hill, called from the name of its inhabitants. For the father of the gods, hating the tricks and lies of the Cercopians and the crimes committed by that treacherous race, once changed the men to ugly animals in such a way that they might be unlike human shape and yet seem like them. He shortened their limbs, blunted and turned back their noses, and furrowed their faces with deep wrinkles as of age. Then he sent them, clothed complete in yellow hair, to dwell in these abodes. But first he took from them the power of speech, the use of tongues born for vile perjuries, leaving them only the utterance of complaint in hoarse, grating tones.
When he had passed these by and left the walled city of Parthenope upon the right, he came upon the left to the mound-tomb of the tuneful son of Aeolus and the shores of Cumae, teaming with marshy waters, and, entering the grotto of the long-lived sibyl, prayed that he might pass down through Avernus' realm and see his father's shade. The sibyl held her eyes long

1 The Aeolian Isles.
2 Misenus.
erexit tandemque deo furibunda recepto
"magna petis," dixit, "vir factis maxime, cuius dextera per ferrum, pietas spectata per ignes.
pone tamen, Troiane, metum: potiere petitis e Elysiasque domos et regna novissima mundi me duce cognoscies simulacraque cara parentis.
invia virtuti nulla est via." dixit et auro fulgentem ramum Silva Iunonis Avernae mostravit iussitque suo divellere trunco.
paruit Aeneas et formidabilis Orci vidit opes atavosque suos umbramque senilem magnanimi Anchisae; didicit quoque iura locorum, quaeque novis essent adeunda pericula bellis.
inde fersens lassos adverso tramite passus cum duce Cumaea mollit sermone laborem.
dumque iter horrendum per opaca crepuscula carpit,
"seu dea tu præsens, seu dis gratissima," dixit,
"numinis instar eris semper mihi, meque fates muneris esse tui, quae me loca mortis adire, quae loca me visae volui evadere mortis.
pro quibus aerias meritis evectus ad auras templa tibi statuam, tribuam tibi turis honores." respicit hunc vates et suspiratibus haustis
"nec dea sum," dixit "nec sacri turis honore humanum dignare caput, neu nescius erres, lux aeterna mihi carituraque fine dabatur, si mea virginitas Phoebus patuisset amanti.
dum tamen hanc sperat, dum praecorrumpere donis me cupit, 'elige,' ait 'virgo Cumaea, quid optes: 135 fixed upon the earth, then lifted them at last and, full of mad inspiration from her god, replied: "Great things do you ask, you man of mighty deeds, whose hand, by sword, whose piety, by fire, has been well tried. But have no fear, Trojan; you shall have your wish, and with my guidance you shall see the dwellings of Elysium and the latest kingdom of the universe; and you shall see your dear father’s shade. There is no way denied to virtue.” She spoke and showed him, deep in Avernal Juno’s *forest, a bough gleaming with gold, and bade him pluck it from its trunk. Aeneas obeyed; then saw grim Orcus’ possessions, and his own ancestral shades, and the aged spirit of the great-souled Anchises. He learned also the laws of those places, and what perils he himself must undergo in new wars. As he retraced his weary steps along the upward way he beguiled the toil with discourse with his Cumaean guide; and as he fared along the dismal road in the dim dusk he said: "Whether thou art a goddess in very truth, or a maid most pleasing to the gods, to me shalt thou always seem divine, and I shall confess that I owe my life to thee, through whose will I have approached the world of death, have seen and have escaped in safety from the world of death. And for these services, when I have returned to the upper regions, I will erect a temple to thee and there burn incense in thine honour.” The sibyl regarded him and, sighing deeply, said: "I am no goddess, nor do thou deem any mortal worthy of the honour of the sacred incense. But, lest you mistake in ignorance, eternal, endless life was offered me, had my virgin modesty consented to Phoebus’ love. While he still hoped for this and sought to break my will with gifts, he said: ‘Choose what you will, optatis potiere tuis. ego pulveris hausti ostendi cumulum: quot haberet corpora pulvis, tot mihi natales contingere vana rogavi;
OVID

excidit, ut peterem iuvenes quoque protinus annos.
hos tamen ille mihi dabat aeternamque iuventam, si Venerem paterer: contemplo munere Phoebi innuba permaneo; sed iam felicior actas terga dedit, tremuloque gradu venit aegra senectus, quae patienda diu est. nam iam mihi saecula septem acta vides: superest, numeros ut pulveris aequem, ter centum messes, ter centum musta videre.

tempus erit, cum de tanto me corpore parvam longa dies faciet, consumptaque membra senecta ad minimum redigentur onus: nec amata videbor nec placuisse deo, Phoebus quoque forsitan ipse vel non cognoscet, vel dilexisse negabit:
asque adeo mutata ferar nullique videnda, voce tamen noscar; vocem mihi fata relinquent.”

Talia convexum per iter memorante Sibylla sedibus Euboicam Stygiis emergit in urbem Troius Aeneas sacrisque ex more litatis litora adit nondum nutricis habentia nomen.
hic quoque substiterat post taedia longa laborum Neritius Macareus, comes experientis Ulixei.
desertum quondam mediis sub rupibus Aetnae noscit Achaemeniden inprovisoque repertum maiden of Cumae, and you shall have your choice.' Pointing to a heap of sand, I made the foolish prayer that I might have as many years of life as there were sand-grains in the pile; but I forgot to ask that those years might be perpetually young. He granted me the years, and promised endless youth as well, if I would yield to love. I spurned Phoebus' gift and am still unwedded. But now my joyous springtime of life has fled and with tottering step weak old age is coming on, which for long I must endure. Even now you see me after seven centuries of life, and, ere my years equal the number of the sands, I still must behold three hundred harvest-times, three hundred vintages. The time will come when length of days will shrivel me from my full form to but a tiny thing, and my limbs, consumed by age, will shrink to a feather's weight. Then will I seem never to have been loved, never to have pleased the god. Phoebus himself, perchance, will either gaze unknowing on me or will deny that he ever loved me. Even to such changes shall I come. Though shrunk past recognition of the eye, still by my voice shall I be known, for the fates will leave me my voice."

While thus along the hollow way the sibyl told her story, out of the Stygian world Trojan Aeneas emerged near the Euboean city. Making due sacrifices here, he next landed on a shore which did not yet bear his nurse's name. Here also Neritian Macareus, a comrade of all-suffering Ulysses, had stayed behind after the long weariness of his wanderings. He recognizes Achaemenides, whom they had left long since abandoned midst the rocks of Aetna. Amazed thus suddenly to find him still

---

1 Cumae.
2 Caieta.
3 Aeneas had taken him on board near Aetna.
ovrfr
vivere miratus, "qui te casusve deusve servat, Achaemenide? cur" inquit "barbara Graium prora vehit? petitur vestra quae terra carina?"
talia quaerenti, iam non hirsutus amictu, iam suus et spinis conserto tegmine nullis, fatur Achaemenides: "iterum Polyphemon et illos adspiciam fluidos humano sanguine rictus, hac mihi si potior domus est Ithaceque carina, si minus Aenean veneror genitore, nec umquam esse satis potero, praestem licet omnia, gratus.
quod loquor et spiro caelumque et sidera solis respicio, possimne ingratus et inmemor esse?
ille dedit, quod non anima haec Cyclopis in ora venit, et ut iam nunc lumen vitale relinquam, aut tumulo aut certe non illa condar in alvo.
quid mihi tunc animi (nisi si timor abstulit omnem sensum animumque) fuit, cum vos petere alta relictus aequora conspexi? volui inclamare, sed hosti prodere me timui: vestrae quoque clamor Ulixis paene rati nocuit. vidi, cum monte revulsum inmanem scopulum medias permisit in undas; vidi iterum veluti tormenti viribus acta vasta Giganteo iaculantem saxa lacerto et, ne deprimeret fluctus ventusve carinam, pertimui, iam me non esse oblitus in illa.
ut vero fuga vos a certa morte reduxit, ille quidem totam gemebundus obambulat Aetnam praetemptatque manu silvas et luminis orbus rupibus incursat foedataque bracchia tabo in mare protendens gentem exsecratur Achivam atque ait: 'o si quis referat mihi casus Ulixen, alive, he says: "What chance, what god has saved you, Achaemenides? Why does a Greek sail in a Trojan ship? What land does your vessel seek?"

And to his questions Achaemenides, no longer roughly clad, his garments no longer pinned with thorns, but his own man once more, replied: "May I look on Polyphemus yet again, and those wide jaws of his, dripping with human gore, if I prefer my home and Ithaca to this ship, if I revere Aeneas less than my own father. Nor can I ever pay my debt of gratitude, though I should give my all. That I speak and breathe and see the heavens and the constellations of the sun, for this can I cease to thank him, and be mindful of him? 'Tis due to him that my life came not into the Cyclops' jaws, and though even now I should leave the light of life, I should be buried in a tomb, but surely not in that monster's maw. What were my feelings then (except that fear took away all sense and feeling) when, left behind, I saw you making for the open sea? I longed to call out to you, but I feared to betray myself to the enemy. Even your vessel Ulysses' cry almost wrecked. I saw when Cyclops tore up a huge rock from the mountain-side and hurled it far out to sea. I saw him again throwing great stones with his gigantic arms as from a catapult, and I feared lest the waves or the wind should sink the ship, forgetting that I was not in her. But when you escaped by flight from certain death, he, groaning the while, went prowling all over Aetna, groping through the woods with his hands, and blindly dashing against the rocks. Then would he stretch out his bleeding arms to the sea and curse the whole Greek race, and say: 'Oh, that some chance would but bring 1 i.e. of the stone.

aut aliquem e sociis, in quem mea saeviat ira, viscera cuius edam, cuius viventia dextra membra mea laniem, cuius mihi sanguis inundet guttur, et elisi trepident sub dentibus artus:
quam nullum aut leve sit damnun mihi lucis ademptae!'
haec et plura ferox, me luridus occupat horror spectantem vultus etiamnum caede madentes crudelesque manus et inanem luminis orbem membraque et humano concretam sanguine barbam.
mors erat ante oculos, minimum tamen illa malorum, et iam prensurum, iam nune mea viscera rebar in sua mersurum, mentique haerebat imago temporis illius, quo vidi bina meorum ter quater adfligi sociorum corpora terrae, cum super ipse iacens hirsuti more leonis visceraque et carnes cumque albis ossa medullis semianimesque artus avidam condebat in alvum; me tremor invasit: stabam sine sanguine maestus, mandentemque videns eiectantemque cruentas ore dapes et frusta mero glomerata vomentem:
talia fingebam misero mihi fata parari perque dies multos latitans omnemque tremiscens ad strepitum mortemque timens cupidusque moriri glande famem pellens et mixta frondibus herba solus inops exspes leto poenaeque relictus hane procul adspexi longo post tempore navem oravique fugam gestu ad litusque cucurri, et movi: Graiumque ratis Troiana recepti!
Ulysses back to me, or some one of his friends, against whom my rage might vent itself, whose vitals I might devour, whose living body I might tear asunder with my hands, whose gore might flood my throat, and whose mangled limbs might quiver between my teeth! How nothing at all, or how slight a thing would the loss of my sight appear! This and much more in fury. Pale horror filled me as I looked upon his face still smeared with blood, and his cruel hands, his sightless eye, his limbs and his beard, matted with human gore. Death was before my eyes, but that was the least of all my troubles. I kept always thinking: now he'll catch me, now he'll make my flesh part of his; and the picture stuck in my mind of that time when I saw him catch up two of my friends at once and dash them thrice and again upon the ground; and when, crouching like a shaggy lion over them, he filled his greedy maw with their vitals and their flesh, their bones full of white marrow, and their limbs still warm with life. A quaking terror seized me and I stood pale with horror as I watched him now chewing, now ejecting his bloody feast, now disgorging his scraps of food mingled with wine. Such fate I pictured as in store for wretched me. For many days I kept myself in hiding, trembling at every sound, fearing death and yet longing to die, keeping off starvation with acorns and grass and leaves, alone, helpless and hopeless, abandoned to suffering and death. And then, after a long time, far in the distance I saw this ship, and I begged them by my gestures to save me, I rushed down to the shore and I touched their hearts: a Trojan ship received a Greek! Now do you also tell of your adventures, best of comrades, what your leader tu quoque pande tuos, comitum gratissime, casus et ducis et turbae, quae tecum est credita ponto."

Aeolone ille resept Tusco regnare profundo, Aeolone Hippotaden, cohibentem carcere ventos; quos bovis inclusos tergo, memorabile munus, 225 Dulichium sumpsisse ducem flatuque secundo lucibus isse novem et terram aspexisse petitam; proxima post nonam cum sese aurora moveret, invidia socios praedaeque cupidine victos esse; ratos aurum, dempsisse ligamina ventis; 230 cum quibus isse retro, per quas modo venerat undas, Aeolique ratem portus repetisse tyranni. "inde Lami veterem Laestrygonis" inquit "in urbec venimus: Antiphates terra regnabat in illa. missus ad hunc ego sum, numero comitante duorum, vixque fuga quaesita salus comit'que mihique, 236 tertius e nobis Laestrygonis inpi a tinxit ora cruore suo. fugientibus instat et agmen concitat Antiphates; coeunt et saxa trabesque coniciunt merguntque viros merguntque carinas: 240 una tamen, quae nos ipsumque vehebat Ulixen, effugit. amissa sociorum parte dolentes multaque conquesti terris adlabimur illis, quas procul hinc cernis (procul est, mihi crede, videnda insula visa mihi !) tuque o iustissime Troum, 245 nate dea, (neque enim finito Marte vocandus hostis es, Aenea) moneo, fuge litora Circes! nos quoque Circaeo religata in litore pinu, Antiphatae memores inmansuetique Cyclopis, 316 suffered and the company which put to sea with you."

Then Macareus told how Aeolus ruled over the Tuscan waters, Aeolus, son of Hippotes, confining the winds in prison. These winds, enclosed in a bag of bull’s hide, the Dulichian captain had received, a memorable gift. Nine days they had sailed along with a good stern breeze and had sighted the land they sought; but when the tenth morning dawned, Ulysses’ comrades were overcome by envy and by lust of booty; thinking that gold was in the bag, they untied the strings that held the winds. These blew the vessel back again over the waves they had just crossed, and she re-entered the harbour of the Aeolian tyrant. "After that," he said, "we came to the ancient city of Laestrygonian Lamus. Antiphates was ruling in that land. I was sent to him with two companions. One comrade and myself by flight barely reached a place of safety; but the third of us stained with his blood the Laestrygonians’ impious mouths. Antiphates pursued us as we fled and urged his band after us. They came on in a mob, hurling stones and heavy timbers, and they sank our men and sank our ships. One of them, however, in which I and Ulysses himself sailed, escaped. Grieving for our lost companions and with many lamentations, we finally reached that land which you see at some distance yonder. (And, trust my word, I found ‘twas best to see it at a distance.) And you, most righteous Trojan, son of Venus (for now that the war is over, you are no longer to be counted foe, Aeneas), I warn you, keep away from Circe’s shores! We also, having moored our vessel on Circe’s shore, and remembering Antiphates and the cruel Cyclops, refused to go further, but were ire negabamus; sed tecta ignota subire sorte sumus lecti: sors me fidumque Politen Eurylochumque simul nimioque Elpenora vino bisque novem socios Circaea ad moenia misit.
quae simul attigimus stetimusque in limine tecti, mille lupi mixtæque lupis ursaeque leaeque occursu fecere metum, sed nulla timenda nullaque erat nostro factura in corpore vulnus;
quin etiam blandas movere per aera caudas nostraque adulantes comitant vestigia, donec excipiunt famulae perque atria marmore tecta ad dominam ducunt: pulchro sedet illa recessu sollemni solio pallamque induta nitentem insuper aurato circumvelatur amictu.
Nereides nymphaeque simul, quae vellera motis nulla trahunt digitis nec fila sequentia ducunt:
gramina disponunt sparsosque sine ordine Flores secernunt calathis variasque coloribus herbas; ipsa, quod haec faciunt, opus exigit, ipsa, quis usus quove sit in folio, quae sit concordia mixtis, rovit et adversus pensas examinat herbas.
haec ubi nos vidit, dicta acceptaque salute diffudit vultus et reddidit omina votis.
nec mora, misceri tosti iubet hordea grani mellaque vimque meri cum lacte coagula passo, quia sub hac lateant furtim dulcedine, sucos adicit. accipimus sacra data pocula dextra.
quae simul arenti sitientes hausimus ore,
et tetigit summos virga dea dira capillos, (et pudet et referam) saetis horrescere coepi, nec iam posse loqui, pro verbis edere raecum chosen by lot to approach the unknown houses. The lot sent me and the trusty Polites, Eurylochus also and Elpenor, too much given to wine, and eighteen others to Circe's city. When we arrived and stood within her courts, a thousand wolves and she-bears and lionesses in a mixed throng rushed on us, filling us with terror. But not one of them was to be feared; not one of them was to give us a single scratch upon our bodies. Why, they even wagged their tails in show of kindness, and fawned upon us as they followed us along, until attendant maidens took us in charge and led us through the marble halls to their mistress' presence. She sat in a beautiful retreat on her throne of state, clad in a gleaming robe, with a golden veil above. Her attendants were Nereids and nymphs, who card no fleece and spin no woollen threads with nimble fingers; their only task, to sort out plants, to select from a jumbled mass and place in separate baskets flowers and herbs of various colours. She herself oversees the work they do; she herself knows what is the value of each leaf, what ingredients mix well together, directs the tasks, and weighs the herbs. When she saw us and when welcome had been given and received, she smiled upon us and seemed to promise us the friendship we desired. At once she bade her maidens spread a feast of parched barley-bread, of honey, strong wine, and curdled milk; and in this sweet drink, where they might lie unnoticed, she slyly squeezed some of her baleful juices. We took the cup which was offered by her divine hand. As soon as we had thirstily drained the cup with parched lips, the cruel goddess touched the tops of our heads with her magic wand; and then (I am ashamed to tell, yet will I tell) I began to grow rough with bristles, and I could speak no longer, but in murmur et in terram toto procumbere vultu, osque meum sensi pando occallescere rostro, colla tumere toris, et qua modo pocula parte sumpta mihi fuerant, illa vestigia feci cumque eadem passis (tantum medicamina possunt!) claudor hara, solumque suis caruisse figura 286 vidimus Eurylochum: solus data pocula fugit; quae nisi vitasset, pecoris pars una manerem nunc quoque saetigeri, nec tantae cladis ab illo certior ad Circen ultor venisset Ulixes. 290 pacifer huic dederat florem Cyllenius album:
moly vocant superi, nigra radice tenetur;
tutus eo monitisque simul cælestibus intrat ille domum Circes et ad insidiosa vocatus pocula conantem virga mulcere capillos 295 reppulit et stricto pavidam deterruit ense.
inde fides dextræque datae thalamoque receptus coniugii dotem sociorum corpora poscit.
spargimur ignotae sucis melioribus herbae percutimurque caput conversae verbere virgae, 300 verbaque dicuntur dictis contraria verbis.
quo magis illa canit, magis hoc tellure levati erigimur, saetaeque cadunt, bifidosque relinquit rima pedes, redeunt umeri et subiecta lacertis brachia sunt: flentem flentes amplectimur ipsi 305 haeremusque ducis collo nec verba locuti ulla priora sumus quam nos testantia gratos.
annua nos illic tenuit mora, multaque præsens 320 place of words came only hoarse, grunting sounds, and I began to bend forward with face turned entirely to the earth. I felt my mouth hardening into a long snout, my neck swelling in brawny folds, and with my hands, with which but now I had lifted the goblet to my lips, I made tracks upon the ground. And then I was shut up in a pen with others who had suffered the same change (so great was the power of her magic drugs!). We saw that Eurylochus alone was without the pig form; for he alone had refused to take the cup. If he had not refused it, I should even now be one of the bristly herd, and Ulysses would never have been informed by him of our great calamity, and come to Circe to avenge us. Peace-bringing Cyllenius had given him a white flower which the gods call moly. It grows up from a black root. Safe with this and the directions which the god had given him, Ulysses entered Circe's palace and, when he was invited to drink of the fatal bowl, he struck aside the wand with which she was attempting to stroke his hair, and threatened the quaking queen with his drawn sword. Then faith was pledged and right hands given and, being accepted as her husband, he demanded as a wedding gift the bodies of his friends. We were sprinkled with the more wholesome juices of some mysterious herb, our heads received the stroke of her reversed rod, and words were uttered over us which counteracted the words said before. And as she sang, more and still more raised from the ground we stood erect, our bristles fell away, our feet lost their cloven hoofs, our shoulders came back to us, and our arms resumed their former shape. Weeping, we embraced him, weeping too, and clung to our chieftain's neck; and the first words we uttered were of gratitude to him. We tarried in that country for a year, and in so long a tempore tam longo vidi, multa auribus hausi, hoc quoque cum multis, quod clam mihi rettulit una quattuor e famulis ad talia sacra paratis. cum duce namque meo Circe dum sola moratur, illa mihi niveo factum de marmore signum ostendit iuvenale gerens in vertice picum, aede sacra positum multisque insigne coronis. quis foret et quare sacra coleretur in aede, cur hanc ferret avem, quaerenti et scire volenti 'accipe' ait, 'Macareu, dominaeque potentia quae sit hinc quoque disce meae; tu dictis adice mentem!

"'Picus in Ausoniis, proles Saturnia, terris rex fuit, utilium bello studiosus equorum; forma viro, quam cernis, erat: licet ipse decorum adspicias fictaque probes ab imagine verum; par animus formae; nec adhuc spectasse per annos quinquennem poterat Graia quater Elide pugnam. ille suos dryadas Latiiis in montibus ortas verterat in vultus, illum fontana petebant numina, naiades, quas Albula, quasque Numici, quas Anienis aquae cursuque brevissimus Almo Narve tuit praeceps et opaceae Farfarus umbrae, quaeque colunt Scythicae stagnum nemorale Dianae finitimisque lacus; spretis tamen omnibus unam ille colit nymphen, quam quondam in colle Palati dicitur ancipiti peperisse Venilia Iano. haec ubi nubilibus primum maturuit annis, praeposito cunctis Laurenti tradita Pico est, time many were the things I saw with my own eyes and many were the tales I heard. Here is one of the many which one of the four attendants appointed for such offices as have been mentioned \(^1\) told me privately. For, while Circe was dallying alone with our leader, this nymph pointed out to me a snow-white marble statue of a young man with a woodpecker on his head. The statue was set in a sacred fane and attracted attention for its many wreaths. When in my curiosity I asked who it was and why he was worshipped in that holy place and why he had the bird upon his head, she told me this story:

"Listen, Macareus, and learn from this how strong is my mistress' magic. And do you give diligent heed to what I say.

"Picus, the son of Saturn, was once the king of the Ausonian country and was very fond of horses fit for war. The hero's form was as you see it. And, though you should look upon his living beauty, still would you approve the true in comparison with his mimic form. His spirit was equal to his body. He could not yet have seen, as the years went by, four quinquennial contests at Grecian Elis; but already had he attracted to his beauty all the dryads sprung from the hills of Latium; the nymphs of the fountains pined for him, and the naiads who dwell in the Albula, beneath Numicus' stream and Anio's, short-coursing Almo, headlong Nar, and Farfar's shady waters; and those who haunt the wooded pool of Taurian Diana and the neighbouring lakes. But, spurning all these, he loved one nymph alone, whom once on the Palatine Venilia is said to have borne to two-headed Janus. This maid, when she had ripened into marriageable years, was given

\(^1\) See l. 266 ff.
rara quidem facie, sed rario arte canendi, undae Canens dicta est: silvas et saxa movere et mulcere feras et flumina longa morari ore suo volucreque vagas retinere solebat.

quae dum feminea modulatur carmina voce, exierat tecto Laurentes Picus in agros indigenas fixurus apros tergumque premebat acris equi laevaque hastilia bina ferebat poeniceam fulvo chlamydem contractus ab auro.

venerat in silvas et filia Solis easdem, utque novas legeret fecundis collibus herbas, nomine dicta suo Circaea reliquerat arva.
quaes simul ac iuvenem virgultis abdita vidit, obstipuit: cecidere manu, quas legerat, herbae, flammaque per totas visa est errare medullas.

ut primum valido mentem conlegit ab aestu, quid euperet, fassura fuit: ne posset adire, cursus equi fecit circumfususque satelles.
“non” ait “effugies, vento rapiare licebit, si modo me nori, si non evanuit omnis herbarum virtus, et non mea carmina fallunt.” dixit et effigiem nullo cum corpore falsi fingit apri praeterque oculos transcurrere regis iussit et in densum trabibus nemus ire videri, plurima qua silva est et equo loca pervia non sunt.
haut mora, continuo praedae petit inscius umbram Picus equique celer spumantia terga relinquit spemque sequens vanam silva pedes errat in alta.
to Laurentian Picus, preferred above all suitors. Rare was her beauty, but rarer still her gift of song, whence was her name, Canens. She used to move woods and rocks, soften wild beasts, stop the long rivers with her singing, and stay the wandering birds. Once, while she was singing her songs with her maidenly voice, Picus had sallied forth from home into the Laurentian fields to hunt the native boar. He bestrode a prancing courser, carrying in his left hand a brace of spears and wearing a purple mantle caught with a brooch of gold. The daughter of the Sun also had come to those selfsame woods and, to gather fresh herbs on the fertile hills, she had left the fields called Circaean from her name. As soon as she saw the youth from her leafy hiding-place she was struck with wonder. The herbs which she had gathered fell from her hands and burning fire seemed to creep through her whole frame. As soon as she could master her passion and collect her thoughts she was on the point of confessing her desire; but his swift-speeding horse and his thronging retinue prevented her approach to him. "You shall not escape me so," she cried, "not though the wind itself should bear you off, if I know myself, if my herbs' magic power has not wholly vanished, and if my charms have not failed." She spoke and fashioned an unsubstantial image of a boar and bade it rush across the trail before the prince's eyes and seem to take cover in a grove thick with fallen trees, where the woods were dense, places where a horse could not penetrate. The thing was done, and straightway Picus, all unconscious of the trick, made after his shadowy prey and, swiftly dismounting from his foaming steed, followed the empty lure

1 Circe.
OVID

concipit illa preces et verba precantia dicit 365 ignotosque deos ignoto carmine adorat, quo solet et niveae vultum confundere Lunae et patrio capiti bibulas subtexere nubes.
tum quoque cantato densetur carmine caelum et nebulas exhalat humus, caecisque vagantur 370 limitibus comites, et abest custodia regis.
nacta locum tempusque "per o, tua lumina," dixit
"quae mea ceperunt, perque hanc, pulcherrime, formam,
quae facit, ut suppless tibi sim dea, consule nostris ignibus et socerum, qui pervidet omnia, Solem 375 acci pe nec durus Titanida despice Circen." dixerat; ille ferox ipsamque precesque repellit et "quaecumque es," ait "non sum tuus; altera captum
me tenet et teneat per longum, conprecor, aevum, nec Venere externa socialia foedera laedam, 380 dum mihi Ianigenam servabunt fata Canentem" saepe retemptatis precibus Titania frustra
"non inpune feres, neque" ait "reddere Canenti, laesaque quid faciat, quid amans, quid femina, disces [rebus," ait "sed amans est laesa et femina Circe!""] tum bis ad occasus, bis se convertit ad ortus, 386 ter iuvenem baculo tetigit, tria carmina dixit.
ille fugit, sed se solito velocius ipse currere miratur: pennas in corpore vidit, seque novam subito Latiiis accedere silvis 390 326
and went wandering on foot amid the forest depths. She utters prayers and fell to muttering incantations, worshipping her weird gods with a weird charm with which it was her wont to obscure the white moon's features, and hide her father's face behind misty clouds. Now also by her magic song the heavens are darkened, and thick fogs spring up from the ground, while the retainers wander in the dim trails far from their king's defense. Having secured a fitting place and time, she says: "Oh, by those eyes which have enthralled my own, and by that beauty, fairest of youths, which has made even me, a goddess, suppliant to you, look with favour on my passion and accept the Sun, who beholds all things, as your father-in-law; and do not cruelly reject Circe, the Titaness." But he fiercely repelled her and her prayers, and said: "Whoever you are, I am not for you. Another has taken and holds my love in keeping, and I pray that she may keep it through all coming time. Nor will I violate my plighted troth by any other love so long as the fates shall preserve to me my Canens, Janus' daughter." Having tried oft-repeated prayers in vain, the Titaness exclaimed: "But you shall not go scathless, nor shall your Canens ever have you more; and you shall learn by experience not alone what any woman, loving and scorned, can do, but what the woman, Circe, loving and scorned, can do!" Then twice she turned her to the west and twice to the east; thrice she touched the youth with her wand and thrice she sang her charms. He turned in flight, but was amazed to find himself running more swiftly than his wont, and saw wings spring out upon his body. Enraged at his sudden change to a strange bird in his Latian woods, he indignatus avem duro fera robora rostro figit et iratus longis dat vulnera ramis;
purpureum chlamydis pennae traxere colorem;
fibula quod fuerat vestemque momorderat aurum, pluma fit, et fulvo cervix praecingitur auro, 395 nec quicquam antiquum Pico nisi nomina restat.

"Interea comites, clamato saepe per agros nequiquam Pico nullaque in parte reperto, inveniunt Circen (nam iam tenuaverat auras passaque erat nebulas ventis ac sole recludi) 400 criminibusque premunt veris regemque reposcunt vimque ferunt saevisque parant incessere telis:
illa nocens spargit virus sucosque veneni et Noctem Noctisque deos Ereboque Chaoque convocat et longis Hecaten ululatibus orat. 405 exsiluere loco (dictu mirabile) silvae, ingemuitque solum, vincinaque palluit arbor, sparsaque sanguineis maduerunt pabula guttis, et lapides visi mugitus edere raucos et latrare canes et humus serpentibus abris 410 squalere et tenues animae volitare silentum:
attonitum monstris vulgus pavet; illa paventis ora venenata tetigit mirantia virga, cuius ab attactu variarum monstra ferarum in iuvenes veniunt: nulli sua mansit imago. 415

"Sparserat occiduus Tartessia litora Phoebus, et frustra coniunx oculis animoque Canentis exspectatus erat: famuli populusque per omnes 328
pecked at the rough oak-trees with his hard beak and wrathfully inflicted wounds on their long branches. His wings took the colour of his bright red mantle, and what had been a brooch of gold stuck through his robe was changed to feathers, and his neck was circled with a golden-yellow band; and naught of his former self remained to Picus except his name.

"Meanwhile his companions, calling often and vainly for Picus throughout the countryside and finding him nowhere, came upon Circe (for now she had cleared the air and had permitted the clouds to be dispelled by wind and sun), charged her flatly with her crime, demanded back their king with threats of force, and were preparing to attack her with their deadly spears. But she sprinkled upon them her baleful drugs and poisonous juices, summoning to her aid Night and the gods of Night from Erebus and Chaos, and calling on Hecate in long-drawn, wailing cries. The woods, wonderful to say, leaped from their place, the ground rumbled, the neighbouring trees turned white, and the herbage where her poisons fell was stained with clots of blood. The stones also seemed to voice hoarse bellowings; the baying of dogs was heard, the ground was foul with dark, crawling things, and the thin shades of the silent dead seemed to be flitting about. The astounded crowd quaked at the monstrous sights and sounds; but she touched the frightened, wondering faces with her magic wand, and at the touch horrid, beast-like forms of many shapes came upon the youths, and none kept his proper form.

"'Now the setting sun had bathed the Tartessian shores, and vainly had Canens watched for her lord's return with eyes and heart. Her slaves and her discurrunt silvas atque obvia lumina portant; nec satis est nymphae flere et lacerare capillos et dare plangorem (facit haec tamen omnia) seque proripit ac Latios errat vesana per agros. sex illam noctes, totidem redeuntia solis lumina viderunt inopem somnique cibique per iuga, per valles, qua fors ducebat, euntem; ultimus adspexit Thybris luctuque viaque fessam et iam longa ponentem corpora ripa. illic cum lacrimis ipso modulata dolore verba sono tenui maerens fundebat, ut olim carmina iam moriens canit exequalia cygnus; luctibus extremum tenues liquefacta medullas tabuit inque leves paulatim evanuit auras, fama tamen signata loco est, quem rite Canentem nomine de nymphae veteres dixere Camenae.' "Talia multa mihi longum narrata per annum visaque sunt. resides et desuetudine tardi rursus inire fretum, rursus dare vela iubemur, ancipitesque vias et iter Titania vastum dixerat et saevi restare pericula ponti: pertimui, fateor, nactusque hoc litus adhaesi." Finierat Macareus, urnaque Aeneia nutrix condita marmorea tumulo breve carmen habebat:
OVID

HIC • ME • CAIETAM • NOTAE • PIETATIS • ALUMNUS EREPTAM • ARGOLICO • QUO • DEBUIT • IGNE • CREMAVIT

solvitur herboso religatus ab aggere funis, et procul insidias infamataeque relinquant

330
people scattered through all the woods, bearing torches in hope to meet him. Nor was the nymph content to weep, to tear her hair and beat her breasts; (all these she did, indeed) and, rushing forth, she wandered madly through the Latian fields. Six nights and as many returning dawns beheld her wandering, sleepless and fasting, over hills, through valleys, wherever chance directed. The Tiber was the last to see her, spent with grief and travel-toil, laying her body down upon his far-stretching bank. There, with tears, in weak, faint tones, she poured out her mournful words attuned to grief; just as sometimes, in dying, the swan sings a last funeral-song. Finally, worn to a shade by woe, her very marrow changed to water, she melted away and gradually vanished into thin air. Still her story has been kept in remembrance by the place which ancient muses fitly called Canens from the name of the nymph.'

"Many such things I heard and saw during a long year. At length, grown sluggish and slow through inactivity, we were ordered to go again upon the sea and again to spread our sails. The Titaness had told us of the dubious pathways of the sea, their vast extent, and all the desperate perils yet to come. I own I was afraid to face them and, having reached this shore, I stayed behind."

Macareus had finished his story; and Aeneas' nurse, buried in a marble urn, had a brief epitaph carved on her tomb:

Here me, Caieta, snatched from Grecian flames,
My pious son consumed with fitting fire.

Loosing their cables from the grass-grown shore, they kept far out from the treacherous island, the tecta deae lucosque petunt, ubi nubilus umbra in mare cum flava prorumpit Thybris harena; Faunigenaeque domo potitur nataque Latini, non sine Marte tamen. bellum cum gente feroci 450 suscipitur, pactaque furit pro coniuge Turnus. concurrit Latio Tyrрhenia tota, diuque ardua sollicitis victoria quaeritur armis. auget uterque suas externo robore vires, et multi Rutulos, multi Troiana tuentur 455 castra, neque Aeneas Euandri ad moenia frustra, at Venulus frustra profugi Diomedis ad urbem venerat : ille quidem sub Iapyge maxima Dauno moenia condiderat dotaliaque arva tenebat; sed Venulus Turni postquam mandata peregit 460 auxiliumque petit, vires Aetolius heros excusat : nec se aut socieri committere pugnae velle sui populos, aut quos e gente suorum armet habere ullos, "neve haec commenta putetis, admonitu quamquam luctus renoventur amari, 465 perpetiar memorare tamen. postquam alta cremata est

Ilios, et Danaas paverunt Pergama flammás, Naryciusque heros, a virgine virgine rapta, quam meruit poenam solus, digessit in omnes, spargimur et ventis inimica per aequora rapti 470 fulmina, noxem, imbres, iram caelique marisque perpetimur Danai cumulumque Caphereæ cladis, 832 home of the ill-famed goddess, and headed for the wooded coast where shady Tiber pours forth his yellow, silt-laden waters into the sea. There did Aeneas win the daughter and the throne of Latinus, Faunus' son; but not without a struggle. War with a fierce race is waged, and Turnus fights madly for his promised bride. All Etruria rushes to battle-shock with Latium, and with long and anxious struggle hard victory is sought. Both sides augment their strength by outside aid; and many defend the Rutuli and many the Trojan camp. Aeneas had not gone in vain to Evander's home, but Venulus had vainly sought the city of the exiled Diomede. He had founded a large city within Iapygian Daunus' realm, and was ruling the fields granted to him as a marriage portion. But when Venulus had done Turnus' bidding and asked for aid, the Aetolian hero pleaded his lack of resources as his excuse, saying that he was not willing to expose himself or his father-in-law's people to the risk of battle, nor did he have men of his own nation whom he might equip for war. "And, that you may not think my excuses false, although the very mention of my woes renews my bitter grief, still will I endure the telling of them. After high Ilium had been burned and Pergama had glutted the furious passions of the Greeks; and after the Narycian hero from a virgin goddess for a violated virgin had brought on us all the punishment which he alone deserved, we Greeks were scattered and, blown by winds over the angry waters, we suffered lightning blasts, thick darkness, storms, the rage of sky and sea and Caphereus, the climax of our

1 Arpi.
2 Ajax, the son of Oileus, who violated Cassandra.
3 Minerva.
neve morer referens tristes ex ordine casus, Graecia tum potuit Priamo quoque flenda videri.
me tamen armiferae servatum cura Minervae fluctibus eripuit, patriis sed rursus ab Argis pellor, et antiquo memores de vulnere poenas exigit alma Venus, tantosque per alta labores aequora sustinui, tantos terrestribus armis, ut mihi felices sint illi saepe vocati, quos communis hiems inportunusque Capheerus mersit aquis, vellemque horum pars una fuissem.

"Ultima iam passi comites belloque fretoque deficiunt finemque rogant erroris, at Acmon fervidus ingenio, tum vero et cladibus asper, ‘quid superest, quod iam patientia vestra asper ferre, viri?’ dixit ‘quid habet Cytherea, quod ultra, velle puta, faciat? nam dum peiora timentur, est locus in vulnus: sors autem ubi pessima rerum, sub pedibus timor est securoque summa malorum.
audiat ipsa licet et, quod facit, oderit omnes sub Diomede viros, odium tamen illius omnes sperrninus, et magno stat magna potentia nobis." talibus inritans Venereum Pleuronius Acmon instimulat verbis veteremque resuscitat iram.
dicta placent paucis, numeri maioris amici Acmona conripimus; cui respondere volenti vox pariter vocisque via est tenuata, comaeque in plumas abeunt, plumis nova colla teguntur pectoraque et tergum, maiores brachia pennas disasters. Not to delay you by telling our sad mishaps in order, Greece at that time could have moved even Priam's tears. Well-armed Minerva's care, however, saved me from the waves; but again I was driven forth from my native Argos, for fostering Venus, still mindful of the old wound I had given her, now exacted the penalty. So great toils did I endure on the high seas and so great toils of war on land that often did I call those blessed of heaven whom the storm, which all had suffered, and cruel Caphereus drowned beneath the waves; and I wished that I, too, had been one of them.

"And now my companions, having endured the uttermost in war and sea, became disheartened and begged me to make an end of wandering. But Acmon, who was naturally hot-headed and who was then especially intractable because of our sufferings, exclaimed: 'What is there left, men, for your long-suffering to refuse to bear? What is there left for Venus to do further, supposing she wishes it? For, so long as we fear worse fortunes, we lie open to wounds; but when the worst possible lot has fallen, then is fear beneath our feet and the utmost misfortune can bring us no further care. Though she herself should hear and, as indeed she does, should hate all the followers of Diomede, still do we all scorn her hatred; and much we reck of her mighty power!' 1 With such insulting words did Pleuronian Acmon rouse Venus and revive her former anger. But few approved his words. We, the greater number of his friends, upbraided Acmon; and when he would have replied, his voice and throat together grew thin; his hair was changed to feathers, and feathers clothed a new-formed neck and breast

1 The phrase is ironical and the variant parvo gives the same sense.
accipiunt, cubitique leves sinuantur in alas; magna pedum digitos pars occupat, oraque cornu indurata rigent finemque in acumine ponunt. hunc Lycus, hunc Idas et cum Rhexenore Nycteus, hunc miratur Abas, et dum mirantur, eandem accipiunt faciem, numerosque ex agmine maior subvolat et remos plausis circumvolat alis: si volucrum quae sit dubiarum forma requiris, ut non cygnorum, sic albis proxima cygnis. vix equidem has sedes et Iapygis arida Dauni arva gener teneo minima cum parte meorum.

Hactenus Oenides, Venulus Calydonia regna Peucetiosque sinus Messapiaque arva relinquit. in quibus antra videt, quae, multa nubila silva et levibus cannis latitantia, semicaper Pan nunc tenet, at quodam tenuerunt tempore nymphae. Apulus has illa pastor regione fugatas terruit et primo subita formidine movit, mox, ubi mens rediit et contempsere sequentem, ad numerum motis pedibus duxere choreas; inprobat has pastor saltuque imitatus agresti addidit obscenis convicia rustica dictis, nec prius os tacuit, quam guttura condidit arbor: arbor enim est, sucoque licet cognoscere mores. quippe notam linguae bacis oleaster amaris exhibet: asperitas verborum cessit in illas.

Hinc ubi legati rediere, negata ferentes arma Aetola sibi, Rutuli sine viribus illis and back. His arms acquired large pinion-feathers and his elbows curved into nimble wings; his toes were replaced by webbed feet and his face grew stiff and horny, ending in a sharp-pointed beak. Lycus viewed him in wonder, so also Idas, Rhexenor and Nycteus and Abas too; and, while they wondered, they became of the same form. The greater number of the flock flew up and circled round the rowers with flapping wings. If you ask of what sort were these questionable birds, while they were not swans, they were very like snowy swans. And now, as son-in-law of Iapygian Daunus, I have hard work to hold this settlement and this parched countryside with but a pitiful remnant of my friends."

So spoke the grandson of Oeneus. And Venulus departed from the Calydonian realm, passing the Peucetian bay and the regions of Messapia. Here he saw a cavern, dark with forest shades and hidden by a growth of waving reeds. The half-goat Pan now claims the place, but at one time the nymphs dwelt there. An Apulian shepherd of that region caused them to run away in terror, filling them at first with sudden fear. But soon, when their courage returned and they saw with scorn who was pursuing them, they returned to their choral dancing again with nimble feet. Still did the shepherd mock them, imitating their dance with his clownish steps, adding to this boorish insults and vulgar words. Nor did he cease speaking until the rising wood covered his mouth. For now he is a tree. You could tell his character from the savour of its fruit; for the wild olive bears the traces of his tongue in its bitter berries. The sharpness of his words has passed to them.

When the ambassadors returned with the news that Aetolian help had been refused them, the Runtuli bella instructa gerunt, multumque ab utraque cruoris parte datur; fert ecce avidas in pinea Turnus 530 texta faces, ignesque timent, quibus unda pepercit.
iample picem et ceras alimenta cetera flammae Malciber urebat perque altum ad carbasa malum ibat, et incurvae sumabant transtra carinae, cum memor has pinus Idaeo vertice caesas 535 sancta deum genetrix tinnitibus aera pulsi aeris et inflati conplevit murmure buxi perque leves domitis invecta leonibus auras “inrita sacrilega iactas incendia dextra, Turne!” ait. “eripiam: nec me patiente cremabit ignis edax nemorum partes et membra meorum.” 541 intonuit dicente dea, tonitrumque secuti cum saliente graves ceciderunt grandine nimbi, aeraque et tumidum subitis concursibus aequor Astraei turbant et eunt in proelia fratres. 545
e quibus alma parens unius viribus usa stuppea praeerupit Phrygiae retinacula classis, fertque rates pronas medioque sub aequore mergit;
robore mollito lignoque in corpora verso in caput facies puppes mutantur aduncae, 550 in digitos abeunt et crura natantia remi, quodque prius fuerat, latus est, mediisque carina subdita navigiis spinae mutatur in usum, lina comae molles, antenmae brachia fiunt, caerulus, ut fuerat, color est; quasque ante timebant, illas virgineis exercent lusibus undas 556 338
without that help went on with the war they had begun; and much blood was spilled on both sides. But lo, Turnus brought devouring torches against the pine fabric of the ships, and what the waves had spared feared the flames. And now Mulciber was burning the pitchy, resinous mass and other rich food for flames, and was spreading even to the tall masts and sails, while the cross-banks of the curving hulls were smoking; when the holy mother of the gods, mindful that these pines were felled on Ida’s top, filled the air with the harsh beat of brazen cymbals and the shrill music of the boxwood flute. Then, borne by her tamed lions through the yielding air, she cried: “Vainly, O Turnus, with impious hand you hurl those brands. For I shall rescue the burning ships, nor with my consent shall the greedy flames devour what was once part and parcel of my sacred woods.” While yet the goddess spoke it thundered and, following the thunder, a heavy shower of rain began to fall, mingled with leaping hail, and the winds, Astraean brothers, wrought wild confusion in the air and on the waves, swollen by the sudden rush of waters, and mingled in the fray. The all-fostering mother, with the help of one of these, broke the hempen fastenings of the Phrygian ships and, forcing them head down, plunged them beneath the water. Straightway the wood softened and turned to flesh, the ships’ curved prows changed to heads, the oars to toes and swimming legs; what had been body before remained as body and the deep-laid keel was changed into a spine; cordage became soft hair, and sail-yards, arms; the sea-green colour was unchanged. And now, as water-nymphs, with maiden glee they sport in the waters which they feared before. Though born on the rough mountain-tops, they now throng Naides aequoreae durisque in montibus ortae molle fretum celebrant nec eas sua tangit origo;
non tamen oblitae, quam multa pericula saepe pertulerint pelago, iactatis saepe carinis subposuere manus, nisi siqua vehebat Achivos:
cladis adhuc Phrygiae memores odere Pelasgos Neritiaeque ratis viderunt fragmina laetis vultibus et laetis videre rigescere puppim vultibus Alcinoi saxumque increscere ligno. 560

Spes erat, in nymphas animata classe marinas posse metu monstri Rutulum desistere bello:
perstat, habetque deos pars utraque, quodque deorum instar, habent animos; nec iam dotalia regna, nec sceptrum soceri, nec te, Lavinia virgo, 570 sed vicensse petunt deponendique pudore bella gerunt, tandemque Venus victricia nati arma videt, Turnusque cadit: cadit Ardea, Turno sospite dicta potens; quem postquam barbarus ensis abstulit et tepida latuerunt tecta favilla, congerie e media tum primum cognita praepes subvolat et cineres plausis everberat alis.
et sonus et macies et pallor et omnia, captam quae deceant urbem, nomen quoque mansit in illa urbis, et ipsa suis deplangitur Ardea pennis. 580

Iamque deos omnes ipsamque Aeneia virtus Iunonem veteres finire coegerat iras, cum, bene fundatis opibus crescentis Iuli, tempestivus erat caelo Cythereius heros.
ambieratque Venus superos colloque parentis 585 340
the yielding waves and no trace of their first state troubles them. And yet, remembering the many perils they have often suffered on the deep, they often place helping hands beneath storm-tossed barques, except such as carried Greeks. Remembering still the Phrygian calamity, they hated the Pelasgian race and they rejoiced to see the broken timbers of Ulysses’ ship, rejoiced to see the vessel of Alcinoöüs grow stiff and its wood turn to stone.

After the fleet had been changed to living water-nymphs, there was hope that the Rutuli, in awe of the portent, would desist from war. But the war went on and both sides had their gods to aid them, and, what is as good as gods, they had courage too. And now neither a kingdom given in dowry, nor the sceptre of a father-in-law, nor you, Lavinian maiden, did they seek, but only victory, and they kept on warring through sheer shame of giving up. At length Venus saw her son’s arms victorious and Turnus fell. Ardea fell, counted a powerful city in Turnus’ lifetime. But after the outlander’s sword destroyed it and warm ashes hid its ruins, from the confused mass a bird flew forth of a kind never seen before, and beat the ashes with its flapping wings. Its sound, its meagre look, its deathly paleness, all things which become a captured city, yes, even the city’s name remained in the bird; and Ardea’s self is beaten in lamentation by its wings.

Now had Aeneas’ courageous soul moved all the gods and even Juno to lay aside their ancient anger, and, since the fortunes of the budding Iülius were well established, the heroic son of Cytherea was ripe for heaven. Venus had approached the heavenly gods and, throwing her arms around her father’s

1 i.e. Ardea, a heron.
circumfusa sui "numquam mihi" dixerat "ullo tempore dure pater, nunc sis mitissimus, opto, Aeneaeque meo, qui te de sanguine nostro secit avum, quamvis parvum des, optime, numen, dummodo des aliquod! satis est inamabile regnum 590 adspexisse semel, Stygios semel isse per amnes." adsensere dei, nec coniunx regia vultus inmotos tenuit placatoque adnuit ore;
tum pater "estis" ait "caelesti munere digni, quaeque petis pro quoque petis: cape, nata, quod optas!"

fatus erat: gaudet gratesque agit illa parenti perque leves auras iunctis invecta columbis litus adit Laurens, ubi tectus harundine serpit in freta flumineis vicina Numicius undis.
hunc iubet Aeneae, quaeecumque obnoxia morti, 600
abluere et tacito deferre sub aequora cursu; corniger exsequitur Veneris mandata suisque, quicquid in Aenea fuerat mortale, repurgat et respersit aquis; pars optima restitit illi.
lustratum genetrix divino corpus odore 605 unxit et ambrosia cum dulci nectare mixta contigit os fecitque deum, quem turba Quirini nuncupat Indigetem temploque arisque recepit.

Inde sub Ascanii dicione binominis Alba resque Latina fuit. succedit Silvius illi. 610 quo satus antiquo tenuit repetita Latinus nomina cum sceptro, clarus subit Alba Latinum.
Epytus ex illo est; post hunc Capetusque Capysque, sed Capys ante fuit; regnum Tiberinus ab illis

342
neck, had said: "O father, who hast never at any time been harsh to me, now be most kind, I pray. To my Aeneas, who is thy grandson and of our blood, grant, O most excellent, some divinity, however small I care not, if only thou grant any. It is enough once to have looked upon the unlovely kingdom, once to have crossed the Stygian stream." The gods all gave assent; nor did the queen-consort keep an unyielding face, but peacefully consented. Then Father Jove declared: "You are both worthy of this heavenly boon, both thou who prayest and he for whom thou prayest. Have then, my daughter, what thou dost desire." He spoke, and Venus, rejoicing, gave her father thanks. Then, borne aloft through the yielding air by her harnessed doves, she came to the Laurentian coast, where the river Numicius, winding through beds of sheltering reeds, pours its fresh waters into the neighbouring sea. She bade the river-god wash away from Aeneas all his mortal part and carry it down in his silent stream into the ocean depths. The horned god obeyed Venus' command and in his waters cleansed and washed quite away whatever was mortal in Aeneas. His best part remained to him. His mother sprinkled his body and anointed it with divine perfume, touched his lips with ambrosia and sweet nectar mixed, and so made him a god, whom the Roman populace styled Indiges and honoured with temple and with sacrifice.

Next Alba and the Latin state came under the sway of Ascanius of the double name. Silvius succeeded him; his son, Latinus, took a name inherited with the ancient sceptre. Illustrious Alba succeeded Latinus; Epytus next, and after him Capetus and Capys, but Capys first. Tiberinus received the

1 i.e. Iulus.
2 The metre prevents the proper order of these names.
cepit et in Tusci demersus fluminis undis 615 nomina fecit aquae; de quo Remulusque feroxque Acrota sunt geniti. Remulus maturior annis fulmineo perit, imitator fulminis, ictu.
fratre suo sceptrum moderatior Acrota forti tradit Aventino, qui, quo regnarat, eodem 620 monte iacet positus tribuitque vocabula monti;
iamque Palatinae summam Proca gentis habebat.
Rege sub hoc Pomona fuit, qua nulla Latinas inter hamadryadas coluit sollertius hortos nec fuit arborei studiosior altera fetus; 625 unde tenet nomen: non silvas illa nec amnes, rus amat et ramos felicia poma ferentes;
nec iaculo gravis est, sed adunca dextera falce, qua modo luxurium premit et spatiantia passim brachia compescit, fisso modo cortice lignum insertit et sucos alieo praestat alumno; nec sentire sitim patitur bibulaeque recurvas radicis fibras labentibus inrigat undis.
hic amor, hoc studium, Veneris quoque nulla cupido
est;
vim tamen agrestum metuens pomaria claudit 635 intus et accessus prohibit refugitque viriles quid non et Satyri, saltatibus apta iuventus, fecere et pinu praecincti cornua Panes Silenusque, suis semper iuvenilior annis, quique deus fures vel falce vel inguine terret, 640 ut poterentur ea? sed enim superabat amando hos quoque Vertumnus neque erat felicior illis.
o quotiens habitu duri messoris aristas 344
kingdom after them, and he, drowned in the waters of the Tuscan stream, gave his name to that river. His sons were Remulus and warlike Acrota. Remulus, the elder, perished by a thunderbolt while striving to imitate the thunder. Acrota, less daring than his brother, resigned the sceptre to brave Aventinus. He lies buried on the same hill where he had reigned and has given his name to the hill. And now Proca held dominion over the Palatine race.

Pomona flourished under this king, than whom there was no other Latian wood-nymph more skilled in garden-culture nor more zealous in the care of fruitful trees. Hence was her name. She cared nothing for woods and rivers, but only for the fields and branches laden with delicious fruits. She carried no javelin in her hand, but the curved pruning-hook with which now she repressed the too luxuriant growth and cut back the branches spreading out on every side, and now, making an incision in the bark, would engraft a twig and give juices to an adopted bough. Nor would she permit them to suffer thirst, but watered the twisted fibres of the thirsty roots with her trickling streams. This was her love; this was her chief desire; nor did she have any care for Venus; yet, fearing some clownish violence, she shut herself up within her orchard and so guarded herself against all approach of man. What did not the Satyrs, a young dancing band, do to win her, and the Pans, their horns encircled with wreaths of pine, and Silenus, always more youthful than his years, and that god \(^1\) who warns off evil-doers with his sickle or his ugly shape? But, indeed, Vertumnus surpassed them all in love; yet he was no more fortunate than they. Oh, how often in the garb of a rough reaper did

\(^1\) Priapus.
corbe tulit verique fuit messoris imago!
tempora saepe gerens faeno religata recenti desectum poterat gramen versasse videri; saepe manu stimulos rigida portabat, ut illum iurares fessos modo disiunxisse iuvencos.
salce data frondator erat vitisque putator;
induerat scalas: lecturum poma putares;
miles erat gladio, piscator harundine sumpta;
denique per multas aditum sibi saepe figurās repperit, ut caperet spectatae gaudia formae.
ille etiam picta redimitus tempora mitra, ininitens baculo, positis per tempora canis, adsimulavit anum cultosque intravit in hortos pomaque mirata est "tanto" que "potentior!" inquit paucaque laudatae dedit oscula, qualia numquam vera dedisset anus, glæbaque incurva resedit suspi̇cien̄s pandos autumni pondere ramos.
ulmus erat contra speciosa nitentibus uvis:
quam socia postquam pariter cum vite probavit,
"at si stare\'t" ait "caelebs sine palmite truncus, nil praeter frondes, quare peteretur, haberet;
haec quoque, quae iuncta est, vitis requiescit in ulmo:
si non nupta foret, terrae acclinata iaceret;
tu tamen exemplo non tangeris arboris huius concubitusque fugis nec te coniungere curas.
atque utinam velles! Helene non pluribus esset he bring her a basket of barley-ears! And he was the perfect image of a reaper, too. Often he would come with his temples wreathed with fresh hay, and could easily seem to have been turning the new-mown grass. Again he would appear carrying an ox-goad in his clumsy hand, so that you would swear that he had but now unyoked his weary cattle. He would be a leaf-gatherer and vine-pruner with hook in hand; he would come along with a ladder on his shoulder and you would think him about to gather apples. He would be a soldier with a sword, or a fisherman with a rod. In fact, by means of his many disguises, he obtained frequent admission to her presence and had much joy in looking on her beauty. He also put on a wig of grey hair, bound his temples with a gaudy head-cloth, and, leaning on a staff, came in the disguise of an old woman, entered the well-kept garden and, after admiring the fruit said: “But you are far more beautiful,” and having praised he kissed her several times as no real old woman ever would have done. The bent old creature sat down on the grass, gazing at the branches bending beneath the weight of autumn fruits. There was a shapely elm-tree opposite, covered with gleaming bunches of grapes. After he had looked approvingly at this awhile, together with its vine companion, he said: “But if that tree stood there unmated to the vine, it would not be sought save for its leaves alone; and this vine, which clings to and rests safely on the elm, if it were not thus wedded, it would lie languishing, flat upon the ground. But you are not touched by the vine’s example and you shun wedlock and do not desire to be joined to another. And I would that you did desire it! Then would you have more suitors than ever Helen had, or she ¹

¹ Hippodamia.
sollicitata procis nec quae Lapis theia movit 670
proelia nec coniunx timidi, haud audacis Ulixis.
nunc quoque, cum fugias aversisque petentes, mille viri cupiunt et semideique deique et quaecumque tenent Albanos numina montes.
sed tu si sapies, si te bene iungere anumque 675 hanc audire voles, quae te plus omnibus illis, plus, quam credis, amo: vulgares reice taedas Vertumnunque tori socium tibi selige! pro quo me quoque pignus habes: neque enim sibi notior ille
est,
quam mihi; nec passim toto vagus errat in orbe, 680
haec loca magna colit; nec, uti pars magna procorum, quam modo vidit, amat: tu primus et ultimus illi ardor eris, solique suos tibi devovet annos.
adde, quod est iuvenis, quod naturale decoris munus habet formasque apte fingetur in omnes, 685 et quod erit iussus, inbeas licet omnia, fiet.
quid, quod amatis idem, quod, quae tibi poma coluntur, primus habet laetaque tenet tua munera dextra!
sed neque iam fetus desiderat arbore demptos nec, quas hortus alit, cum sucis mitibus herbas 690 nec quicquam nisi te: miserere ardentis et ipsum, quod petit, ore meo praesentem crede precari.
ultoresque deos et pectora dura perosam Idalien memoremque time Rhamnusidis iram! quoque magis timeas, (et enim mihi multa vetustas 695 348
for whom the Lapithae took arms, or the wife of the timid, not the bold, Ulysses. And even as it is, though you shun them and turn in contempt from their wooing, a thousand men desire you, and half-gods and gods and all the divinities that haunt the Alban hills. But if you will be wise, and consent to a good match and will listen to an old woman like me, who love you more than all the rest, yes, more than you would believe, reject all common offers and choose Vertumnus as the consort of your couch. You have me also as guaranty for him; for he is not better known to himself than he is to me. He does not wander idly throughout the world, but he dwells in the wide spaces here at hand; nor, as most of your suitors do, does he fall in love at sight with every girl he meets. You will be his first love and his last, and to you alone he will devote his life. Consider also that he is young, blest with a native charm, can readily assume whatever form he will, and what you bid him, though without stint you bid, he will perform. Moreover your tastes are similar, and the fruit which you so cherish he is the first to have and with joyful hands he lays hold upon your gifts. But neither the fruit of your trees, nor the sweet, succulent herbs which your garden bears, nor anything at all does he desire save you alone. Pity him who loves you so, and believe that he himself in very presence through my lips is begging for what he wants. And have a thought for the avenging gods and the Idalian \(^1\) goddess who detests the hard of heart, and the unforgetting wrath of Nemesis! And that you may the more fear these (for my long life has brought me knowledge of many things), I will tell you a story that is well known all over \(^1\) i.e. Cyprian an epithet of Venus.

scire dedit) referam tota notissima Cypro facta, quibus flecti facile et mitescere possis.

"Viderat a veteris generosam sanguine Teucri Iphis Anaxareten, humili de stirpe creatus, viderat et totis perceiveperat ossibus aestum luctatusque diu, postquam ratione furorem vincere non potuit, supplex ad limina venit et modo nutrici miserum confessus amorem, ne sibi dura foret, per spes oravit alumnae, et modo de multis blanditus cuique ministris sollicita petiit propensum voce favorem;
saepe ferenda dedit blandis sua verba tabellis, interdum madidas lacrimarum rore coronas postibus intendit posuitque in limine duro molle latus tristisque serae convicia fecit.

saevior illa freto surgende cadentibus Haedis, durior et ferro, quod Noricus excoquit ignis, et saxo, quod adhuc vivum radice tenetur, spernit et inridet, factisque inmitibus addit verba superba ferox et spe quoque fraudat amantem.
non tuit impatiens longi tormenta doloris

Iphis et ante fores haec verba novissima dixit:
vincis, Anaxarete, neque erunt tibi taedia tandem ulla ferenda mei: laetos molire triumphos et Paeana voca nitidaque incingere lauru!

vincis enim, moriorque libens: age, ferrea, gaude!
certe aliquid laudare mei cogeris amoris, quo tibi sim gratis, meritumque fatebere nostrum.
non tamen ante tui curam excessisse memento quam vitam geminaque simul mihi luce carendum.
Cyprus, by which you may learn to be easily persuaded and to be soft of heart.

"Iphis, a youth of humble birth, had chanced to see Anaxarete, a proud princess of old Teucer's line. He saw her, and at once felt the fire of love through all his frame. Long did he fight against it; but when he found he could not overcome his passion by the power of reason, he came as a suppliant to her door. Now he confessed his unhappy love to her nurse and begged her by her fond hopes for her dear foster-child not to be hard towards him; now, coaxing some one of her many servants, he earnestly begged her to do him a kindly turn; often he gave them coaxing messages on tablets to bear to her; at times he would hang garlands of flowers upon her door, wet with his tears, and lay his soft body down upon her hard threshold, complaining bitterly of her unfeeling bars. But she, more savage than the waves that rise at the setting of the Kids, harder than steel tempered in Noric fire, or living rock, which still holds firmly to its native bed, spurns him and mocks at him. And to her heartless deeds she adds insolent, haughty words, and utterly deprives her lover of hope itself. Unable to bear further the torment of his long agony, before her door Iphis cries these words as his last message to her: 'You win, Anaxarete, and no more need you be annoyed on my account. Celebrate your glad triumph, sing songs of victory, set a gleaming wreath of laurel on your head! For you have won, and I die gladly. Come then, rejoice, you of the iron heart! Surely you will be forced to admit that there is some feature of my love in which I am pleasing to you, and you will confess my merit. But remember that my love for you ended only with my life and that I must neq tibi fama mei ventura est nuntia leti:
ipse ego, ne dubites, adero praesensque videbor, corpore ut examini crudelia lumina pascas.
si tamen, o superi, mortalia facta videtis, este mei memores (nihil ultra lingua precari sustinet) et longo facite ut narremur in aevo, et, quae dempsistis vitae, date tempora famae!
dixit, et ad postes ornatos saepe coronis umentes oculos et pallida bracchia tollens, cum foribus laquei religaret vincula summis, haec tibi sertâ placent, crudelis et inopia!
inseruitque caput, sed tum quoque versus ad illam, atque onus infelix elisa fauce pependit.
icta pedum motu trepidantum ut multa gementem visa dedisse sonum est adapertaque ianua factum prodidit, exclamant famuli frustraque levatum (nam pater occiderat) referunt ad limina matris; accipit illa sinu complexaque frigida nati membra sui postquam miserarum verba parentum edidit et matrum miserarum facta peregit, funera ducebat medium lacrimosa per urbem luridaque arsuro portabat membra feretro.
forte viae vicina domus, qua flebilis ibat pompa, fuit, duraeque sonus plangoris ad aures venit Anaxaretes, quam iam deus ultor agebat.
mota tamen 'videamus' ait 'miserabile funus' et patulis iniit tectum sublime fenestris suffer the loss of two lights at once. And 'twill be no mere rumour that comes to announce my death to you; I shall myself be there, be well assured, and that, too, in visible presence, that you may feast your cruel eyes upon my lifeless body. But if, O gods, you see the things we mortals do, remember me (nothing further can my tongue hold out to pray) and have my story told long ages hence; and what time you have taken from my life give to my fame.' He spoke, and raising his tearful eyes and pale arms to the door-posts that he had often decorated with his floral wreaths, he fastened a rope to the topmost beam, saying the while: 'Does this garland please you, cruel and wicked girl?' Then he thrust his head into the noose, even in that act turning his face towards her, and then, poor fellow, hung there, a lifeless weight with broken neck. The door was struck by the convulsive motion of his feet; it seemed to give out a sound suggesting many fearful things and, being thrown open, showed what had happened there. The servants cried out in horror and took him down, but all in vain. Then (for his father was dead) they bore him to his mother's house. She took him in her arms and embraced her son's cold limbs. And after she had said the words which wretched parents say, and done the things which wretched mothers do, through the midst of the city she led his tearful funeral, and bore the pale corpse on a bier to the funeral pyre. Anaxarete's house chanced to be near the street where the mournful procession was passing, and the sound of mourning came to the ears of the hard-hearted girl, whom already an avenging god was driving on. Yet, moved by the sound, she said: 'Let us go see this tearful funeral.' And she went into her high dwelling with vixque bene inpositum lecto prospexerat Iphin:

deriguere oculi, calidusque e corpore sanguis inducto pallore fugit, conatque retro ferre pedes haesit, conata avertere vultus hoc quoque non potuit, paulatimque occupat artus, quod fuit in duro iam pridem pectore, saxum.
neve ea ficta putes, dominae sub imagine signum servat adhuc Salamis, Veneris quoque nomine templum
Prospicientis habet.—quorum memor, o mea, lentos pone, precor, fastus et amanti iungere, nympha:
sic tibi nec vernum nascentia frigus adurat poma, nec excutiant rapidi florentia venti!" Hace ubi nequiquam formae deus aptus anili edidit, in iuvenem rediit et anilia demit instrumenta sibi talisque apparuit illi, qualis ubi oppositas nitidissima solis imago evicit nubes nullaque obstante reluxit, vimque parat: sed vi non est opus, inque figura capta dei nympha est et mutua vulnera sensit.
Proximus Ausonias iniusti miles Amuli rexit opes, Numitorque senex amissa nepotis munere regna capit, festisque Palilibus urbis moenia conduntur; Tatiusque patresque Sabini bella gerunt, arcisque via Tarpeia reclusa dignam animam poena congestis exuit armis; inde sati Curibus tacitorum more luporum ore premunt voces et corpora victa sopore invadunt portasque petunt, quas obice firmo clausurerat Iliades: unam tamen ipsa reclusit its wide-open windows. Scarce had she gained a good look at Iphis, lying there upon the bier, when her eyes stiffened at the sight and the warm blood fled from her pale body. She tried to step back from the window, but she stuck fast in her place. She tried to turn her face away, but this also she could not do; and gradually that stony nature took possession of her body which had been in her heart all along. And that you may not think this story false, Salamis still keeps a marble statue, the image of the princess. It has a temple in honour of the Gazing Venus also. Have thought of these things, I pray you, and put away, dear nymph, your stubborn scorn; yield to your lover. So may no late spring frost ever nip your budding fruit, and may no rude winds scatter them in their flower."

When the god in the form of age had thus pleaded his cause in vain, he returned to his youthful form, put off the old woman's trappings, and stood revealed to the maiden as when the sun's most beaming face has conquered the opposing clouds and shines out with nothing to dim his radiance. He was all ready to force her will, but no force was necessary; and the nymph, smitten by the beauty of the god, felt an answering passion.

Next false Amulius by force of arms rules the Ausonian state; but old Numitor by the aid of his grandson gains the kingdom he has lost, and the walls of the City are founded on the shepherd's festal day. Tatius and the Sabine fathers wage their war, and Tarpeia, having betrayed the passage to the citadel, gives up her life as forfeit beneath the arms heaped on her. Then the men of Cures, like silent wolves, with hushed voices steal on the Romans buried in slumber, and try the gates which Ilia's son has nec strepitum verso Saturnia cardine fecit; sola Venus portae ecclississe repagula sensit et clausura fuit, nisi quod rescindere numquam dis licet acta deum. Iano loca iuncta tenebant naides Ausoniae gelido ro rantia fonte: has rogat auxilium, nec nymphae iusta petentem sustinuere deam venasque et flumina fontis elicuere sui; nondum tamen invia Iani ora patentis erant, neque iter praecusserat unda: lurida subponunt fecundo sulphura fonti incenduntque cavas fumante bitumine venas. viribus his aliisque vapor penetravit ad ima fontis, et Alpino modo quae certare rigori audebatis aquae, non ceditis ignibus ipsis! flammifera gemini fumant aspergine postes, portaque nequiquam rigidis promissa Sabinis fonte fuit praestucta novo, dum Martius arma indueret miles; quae postquam Romulus ultro obtulit, et strata est tellus Romana Sabinis corporibus strata estque suis, generique cruorem sanguine cum soci eri permiscuit inpius ensis. pace tamen sisti bellum nec in ultima ferro decertare placet Tatiumque accedere regno.

Occiderat Tatius, populisque aequata duobus, Romule, iura dabas: posita cum casside Mavors talibus adfatur divumque hominumque parentem: "tempus adest, genitor, quoniam fundamine magno res Romana valet nec praeside pendet ab uno, fastened with strong bars. But Saturnian Juno herself unfastened one of these, opening the gate on noiseless hinges. Venus alone perceived that the gate's bars had fallen, and would have closed it; but it is never permitted to gods to undo the acts of gods. Now the Ausonian water-nymphs held a spot near Janus' fane, where a cold spring bubbled forth. Venus asked aid of these, nor did the nymphs refuse the goddess her just request, but opened up their fountain's streaming veins. Up to that time the pass of Janus was still open, nor had the water ever blocked the way. Now they placed yellow sulphur beneath their living spring and heated the hollow veins with burning pitch. By these and other means the reeking steam filled the fountain through and through, and you waters, which dared but now to vie with Alpine cold, did not yield in heat to fire itself! The two gate-posts smoked with the hot fumes; and the gate, which had been opened (but now in vain) to the hardy Sabines, was made impassable by the new fountain, until the Roman soldiery could arm themselves. Then Romulus took the offensive, and soon the Roman plain was strewn with the Sabine dead and with its own as well, and the impious swords mingled the blood of son-in-law with blood of father-in-law. At last it was their will to end the war in peace, and not strive with the sword to the bitter end; and 'twas agreed that Tatius should share the throne.

Tatius had fallen and now, Romulus, you were meting equal laws to both the tribes, when Mars put off his gleaming helmet and thus addressed the father of gods and men: "The time is come, O father, since the Roman state stands firm on strong foundations and no longer hangs on one man's praemia, (sunt promissa mihi dignoque nepoti) 810 solvere et ablatum terris inponere caelo, tu mihi concilio quondam praesente deorum (nam memoro memorique animo pia verba notavi) ‘unus erit, quem tu tolles in cacula caeli’ dixisti: rata sit verborum summa tuorum! 815

adnuit omnipotens et nubibus aera caecis occuluit tonitruque et fulgure terruit orbem.
quae sibi promissae sensit rata signa rapinae, innixusque hastae pressos temone cruento inpavidus conscendit equos Gradivus et iuctu verberis increpuit pronusque per aera lapsus constitit in summo nemorosi colle Palati reddentemque suo non regia iura Quiriti abstulit Iliaden: corpus mortale per auras dilapsum tenues, ceu lata plumbea funda 820 missa solet medio glans intabescere caelo;
pulchra subit facies et pulvinaribus altis dignior, est qualis trabeati forma Quirini.

Flebat ut amissum coniunx, cum regia Iuno Irin ad Hersilien descendere limite curvo imperat et vacuae sua sic mandata referre: “o et de Latia, o et de gente Sabina praecipuum, matrona, decus, dignissima tanti ante fuisse viri coniunx, nunc esse Quirini, siste tuos fletus, et, si tibi cura videndi coniugis est, duce me lucum pete, colle Quirini

830

858
strength alone, to grant the reward which was promised to me and to thy worthy grandson, to take him from earth and set him in the heavens. Once to me, in full council of the gods (for I treasured up thy gracious words in retentive mind, and now recall them to thee), thou didst declare: 'One shall there be whom thou shalt bear up to the azure blue of heaven.' Now let the full meaning of thy words be ratified.'" The omnipotent Father nodded his assent; then, hiding all the sky with his dark clouds, he filled the earth with thunder and lightning. Gradivus knew this for the assured sign of the translation which had been promised him; and, leaning on his spear, dauntless he mounted his chariot drawn by steeds straining beneath the bloody yoke, and swung the loud-resounding lash. Gliding downward through the air, he halted on the summit of the wooded Palatine. There, as Ilia's son was giving kindly judgment to his citizens, he caught him up from earth. His mortal part dissolved into thin air, as a leaden bullet hurled by a broad sling is wont to melt away in the mid-heavens. And now a fair form clothes him, worthier of the high couches of the gods, such form as has Quirinus, clad in the sacred robe.

His wife was mourning him as lost, when regal Juno bade Iris go down to Hersilia on her arching way with these directions for the widowed queen: "O queen, bright glory both of the Latin and of the Sabine race, most worthy once to have been the consort of so great a man, and now of divine Quirinus, cease your laments and, if you would indeed behold your husband, come with me to yonder grove which stands green on Quirinus' hill, shading the temple of 1 i.e. not kingly or tyrannical.

OVID

qui viret et templum Romani regis obumbrat"; paret et in terram pictos delapsa per arcus, Hersilien iussis compellat vocibus Iris; illa verecundo vix tollens lumina vultu "o dea (namque mihi nec, quae sis, dicere promptum est, et liquet esse deam) duc, o duc" inquit "et offer coniugis ora mihi, quae si modo posse videre fata semel dederint, caelum accepisse fatebor!") nec mora, Romuleos cum virgine Thaumantea ingreditur colles: ibi sidus ab aethere lapsum decidit in terras; a cuius lumine flagrans Hersilie crinis cum sidere cessit in auras: hanc manibus notis Romanae conditor urbis excipit et priscum pariter cum corpore nomen mutat Horamque vocat, quae nunc dea iuncta Quirino est.
the king of Rome.” Iris obeyed and, gliding to earth along her rainbow arch, accosted Hersilia in the words which had been given her. She, scarce lifting her eyes and with modest look, replied: “O goddess (for I may not tell who thou art, and yet ’tis plain thou art a goddess), lead, oh, lead me on, and show me my husband’s face. If only the fates grant me but once to see him, then shall I say I have gained heaven indeed.” Straightway she fared along with Thaumas’ daughter to the hill of Romulus. There a star from high heaven came gliding down to earth, and Hersilia, her hair bursting into flame from its light, goes up together with the star into thin air. Her with dear, familiar hands Rome’s founder receives, and changes her mortal body and her old-time name. He calls her Hora, and now as goddess is she joined once more to her Quirinus.
QVAERITVR interea quis tantae pondera molis sustineat tantoque queat succedere regi: destinat imperio clarum praenuntia veri Fama Numam; non ille satis cognosse Sabinae gentis habet ritus, animo maiora capaci concipit et, quae sit rerum natura, requirit. huius amor curae patria Curibusque relictis fecit ut Herculei penetraret ad hospitis urbem. Graia quis Italicis auctor posuisset in oris moenia, quaerenti sic e senioribus unus rettulit indigenis, veteris non inscius aevi: "dives ab Oceano bobus Iove natus Hiberis litora felici tenuisse Lacinia cursu fertur, et armento teneras errante per herbas ipse domum magni nec inhospita tecta Crotonis intrasse et requie longum relevasse laborem atque ita discedens, 'aevo' dixisse 'nepotum hic locus urbis erit,' promissaque vera fuerunt. nam fuit Argolico generatus Alemone quidam Myscelus, illius dis acceptissimus aevi. hunc super incumbens pressum gravitase soporis claviger adloquitur: 'patrias, age, desere sedes Meanwhile it is a question who can sustain the burden of so great a task, who can succeed so great a king. Then Fame as a faithful herald selects illustrious Numa for the throne. He, not content with knowing the usages of the Sabine race, conceives larger plans in his generous soul, and seeks to know what is Nature's general law. His great fondness for this pursuit caused him to leave his native Cures and take his way to the city which once gave hospitality to Hercules. There, when he asked who was the founder of this Grecian city on Italian soil, one of the old inhabitants of the place, well versed in its ancient lore, thus answered him: "'Tis said that the son of Jove, returning from the Ocean enriched with the herds of Spain, came by good fortune to the borders of Lacinium, and there, while his cattle grazed upon the tender grass, he entered the home and beneath the friendly roof of the great Croton and refreshed himself by quiet rest from his long toil. And as he took his leave he said: 'Here, ages hence, shall stand the city of your descendants.' And the words proved true. For there was a certain Myscelus, son of Alemon of Argos, the man of all that generation most beloved of heaven. Standing over him as he lay buried in deep slumber, the club-bearer thus addressed him: 'Up and away from 1 Crotona.

2 Hercules.
et pete diversi lapidosas Aesaris undas!'
et, nisi paruerit, multa ac metuenda minatur;
post ea discedunt pariter somnusque deusque surgit Alemunides tacitaque recentia mente visa refert, pugnatque diu sententia secum:
umen abire iubet, prohibent discedere leges, poenaque mors posita est patriam mutare volenti.
candidus Oceano nitidum caput abdiderat Sol, et caput extulerat densissima sidereum Nox:
visus adesse idem deus est cademque monere et, nisi paruerit, plura et graviora minari.
et timuit patriumque simul transferre parabat in sedes penetrale novas: fit murmur in urbe, spretarumque agitur legum reus, utque peracta est causa prior, crimenque patet sine teste probatum, squalidus ad superos tollens reus ora manusque
'o cui ius caeli bis sex fecere labores, fer, precor' inquit 'opem! nam tu mihi criminis auctor.'
mos erat antiquus niveis atrisque lapillis, his damnare reos, illis absolvere culpa;
tunc quoque sic lata est sententia tristis, et omnis calculus inmitem demittitur ater in urnam:
quae simul effudit numerandos versa lapillos, omnibus e nigro color est mutatus in album, candidaque Herculeo sententia numine facta.
your native land; go, seek out the rocky channel of the distant Aesar'; and he threatened him with many fearful things should he not obey. Then did his slumber and the presence of the god withdraw together. The son of Alemon arose and silently recalled the vision which was still vivid in his memory. Long was he in great stress of doubt: the god bade him depart, his country's laws prohibited his departure. The punishment of death was appointed to the man who should desire to change his fatherland. The bright Sun had hidden his shining face beneath the sea, and thick Night had raised her starry face from the waters, when the same god seemed to stand before him, to give the same commands, and to threaten worse and heavier penalties if he should not obey. He was sore afraid. And as soon as he made ready to move his household belongings to a new abode, the rumour got abroad in the town, and he was tried as a breaker of the laws. When the case for the prosecution had been closed and the charge was clearly proved without need of witnesses, the wretched culprit, raising his face and hands to heaven, cried out: 'O thou to whom thy twelve great labours gave thee a claim to heaven, help me, I pray! for thou art responsible for my sin.' It was the custom in ancient times to use white and black pebbles, the black for condemning prisoners and the white for freeing them from the charge. At this time also the fatal vote was taken in this way; and every pebble that was dropped into the pitiless urn was black! But when the urn was turned and the pebbles poured out for counting, the colour of them all was changed from black to white; and so, by the will of Hercules, the vote was made favourable, and Alemon's son was solvit Alemoniden: grates agit ille parenti Amphitryoniadae ventisque faventibus aequor navigat Ionium Sallentinumque Neretum praeterit et Sybarin Lacedaemoniumque Tarentum Sirinosque sinus Crimisenque et Iapygis arva, vixque pererratis, quae spectant litora, terris, invenit Aesarei fatalia fluminis ora nee procul hinc tumulum, sub quo sacrata Crotonis ossa tegebat humus, iussaque ibi moenia terra condidit et nomen tumulati traxit in urbem." talia constabat certa primordia fama esse loci positaeque Italis in finibus urbis.

Vir fuit hic ortu Samius, sed fugerat una et Samon et dominos odioque tyrannidis exul sponte eratisque, licet caeli regione remotos, mente deos adiit et, quae natura negabat visibus humanis, oculis ea pectoris hausit, cumque animo et vigili perspexerat omnia cura,
in medium discenda dabat coetusque silentum dictaque mirantum magni primordia mundi et rerum causas et, quid natura, docebat, quid deus, unde nives, quae fulminis esset origo, Iuppiter an venti discussa nube tonarent, quid quateret terras, qua sidera lege mearent, et quodcumque latet, primusque animalia mensis arcuit inponi, primus quoque talibus ora docta quidem solvit, sed non et eredita, verbis:
freed. He first gave thanks to his patron, Amphitryon's son, and soon with favouring winds was sailing over the Ionian sea. He passed by Salentine Neretum, and Sybaris and Spartan Tarentum, the bay of Siris, Crimisa, and the Iapygian coast; and scarcely had he passed the lands which border on that coast when he found the destined mouth of Aesar's stream, and near by this a mound of earth which guarded the consecrated bones of Croton. There in that land, as the god had bidden him, he laid his city's walls and named it from him who had been buried there." Such was the ancient tale, confirmed by established fame, both of the place and the founding of the city on Italian soil.

There was a man here, a Samian by birth, but he had fled forth from Samos and its rulers, and through hatred of tyranny was living in voluntary exile. He, though the gods were far away in the heavenly regions, still approached them with his thought, and what Nature denied to his mortal vision he feasted on with his mind's eye. And when he had surveyed all things by reason and wakeful diligence, he would give out to the public ear the things worthy of their learning and would teach the crowds, which listened in wondering silence to his words, the beginnings of the great universe, the causes of things and what their nature is: what God is, whence come the snows, what is the origin of lightning, whether it is Jupiter or the winds that thunder from the riven clouds, what causes the earth to quake, by what law the stars perform their courses, and whatever else is hidden from men's knowledge. He was the first to decry the placing of animal food upon our tables. His lips, learned indeed but not believed in this, he was the first to open in such words as these:
OVID

"Parcite, mortales, dapibus temerare nefandis corpora! sunt fruges, sunt deducentia ramos pondere poma suo tumidaeque in vitibus uvae, sunt herbae dulces, sunt quae mitescere flamma mollirique queant; nec vobis lacteus umor eripitur, nec mella thymi redolentia flore: prodiga divitias alimentaque mitia tellus suggerit atque epulas sine caede et sanguine praebet. carne ferae sedant ieiunia, nec tamen omnes: quippe equus et pecudes armentaque gramine vivunt; at quibus ingenium est inmansuetumque serumque, Armeniae tigres iracundique leones cumque lupis ursi, dapibus cum sanguine gaudent. heu quantum scelus est in viscera viscera condi congestoque avidum pinguescere corpore corpus alteriusque animantem animantis vivere leto! scilicet in tantis opibus, quas, optima matrum, terra parit, nil te nisi tristia mandere saevo vulnera dente iuvat ritusque referre Cyclopum, nec, nisi perdideris alium, placare voracis et male morati poteris ieiunia ventris!

"At vetus illa aetas, cui fecimus aurea nomen, fetibus arbores et, quas humus educat, herbis fortunata fuit nec polluit ora cruore. tunc et aves tutae movere per aera pennas, et lepus inpavidus mediis erravit in arvis, nec sua credulitas piscem suspenderat hamo: cuncta sine insidiis nullamque timentia fraudem plenaque pacem erant. postquam non utilis auctor “O mortals, do not pollute your bodies with a food so impious! You have the fruits of the earth, you have apples, bending down the branches with their weight, and grapes swelling to ripeness on the vines; you have also delicious herbs and vegetables which can be mellowed and softened by the help of fire. Nor are you without milk or honey, fragrant with the bloom of thyme. The earth, prodigal of her wealth, supplies you her kindly sustenance and offers you food without bloodshed and slaughter. With flesh the wild beasts appease their hunger, and yet not all, since the horse, the sheep and cattle live on grass; but those whose nature is savage and untamed, Armenian tigers, raging lions, bears and wolves, all these delight in bloody food. Oh, how criminal it is for flesh to be stored away in flesh, for one greedy body to grow fat with food gained from another, for one live creature to go on living through the destruction of another living thing! And so in the midst of the wealth of food which Earth, the best of mothers, has produced, it is your pleasure to chew the piteous flesh of slaughtered animals with your savage teeth, and thus to repeat the Cyclops’ horrid manners! And you cannot, without destroying other life, appease the cravings of your greedy and insatiable maw!

“But that pristine age, which we have named the golden age, was blessed with the fruit of the trees and the herbs which the ground sends forth, nor did men defile their lips with blood. Then birds plied their wings in safety through the heaven, and the hare loitered all unafraid in the tilled fields, nor did its own guilelessness hang the fish upon the hook. All things were free from treacherous snares, fearing no guile and full of peace. But after someone, an victibus invidit, quisquis fuit ille, leonum corporeasque dapes avidum demersit in alvum, fecit iter sceleri, primoque e caede ferarum incaulisse potest maculatum sanguine ferrum (idque satis fuerat) nostrumque potentia letum corpora missa neci salva pietate fatemur:
sed quam danda neci, tam non epulanda fuerunt.

"Longius inde nefas abiit, et prima putatur hostia sus meruisse mori, quia semina pando ernerit rostro spemque interceperit anni; vite caper morsa Bacchi maictatus ad aras dicitur ultoris: nocuit sua culpa duobus!

quid meruistis oves, placidum pccus inque tuendos natum homines, pleno quae fertis in ubere nectar, mollia quae nobis vestras velamina lanas praebetis vitaque magis quam morte iuvatis?
quid meruere boves, animal sine fraude dolisque, innocuum, simplex, natum tolerare labores?
inmemor est demum nec frugum munere dignus, qui potuit curvi dempto modo pondere aratri ruricolam mactare suum, qui trita labore illa, quibus totiens durum renovaverat arvum, tot dederat messcs, percussit colla securi.
nec satis est, quod tale nefas committitur: ipsos inscripsere deos sceleri numenque supernum caede laboriferi credunt gaudere iuvenci!
victima labe carens et praestantissima forma ill exemplar, whoever he was, envied the food of lions, and thrust down flesh as food into his greedy stomach, he opened the way for crime. It may be that, in the first place, with the killing of wild beasts the steel was warmed and stained with blood. This would have been justified, and we admit that creatures which menace our own lives may be killed without impiety. But, while they might be killed, they should never have been eaten.

"Further impiety grew out of that, and it is thought that the sow was first condemned to death as a sacrificial victim because with her curved snout she had rooted up the planted seeds and cut off the season's promised crop. The goat is said to have been slain at the avenging altars because he had browsed the grape-vines. These two suffered because of their own offences! But, ye sheep, what did you ever do to merit death, a peaceful flock, born for man's service, who bring us sweet milk to drink in your full udders, who give us your wool for soft clothing, and who help more by your life than by your death? What have the oxen done, those faithful, guileless beasts, harmless and simple, born to a life of toil? Truly inconsiderate he and not worthy of the gift of grain who could take off the curved plow's heavy weight and in the next moment slay his husbandman; who with his axe could smite that neck which was worn with toil for him, by whose help he had so often renewed the stubborn soil and planted so many crops. Nor is it enough that we commit such infamy: they made the gods themselves partners of their crime and they affected to believe that the heavenly ones took pleasure in the blood of the toiling bullock! A victim without blemish and of perfect form (for beauty proves his
OVID

(nam placuisse nocet) vittis insignis et auro sistitur ante aras auditque ignara precantem inponique suae videt inter cornua fronti, quas coluit, fruges percussaque sanguine cultros inscit in liquida praevisos forsitan unda.
protinus ereptas viventi pectore fibras inspiciunt mentesque deum scrutantur in illis; inde (fames homini vetitorum tanta ciborum est!) audetis vesci, genus o mortale! quod, oro, ne facite, et monitis animos advertite nostris!
cumque boum dabitis caesorum membra palato, mandere vos vestros scite et sentite colonos.

"Et quoniam deus ora movet, sequar ora moventem rite deum Delphosque meos ipsumque recludam aethera et augustae reserabo oracula mentis:
magna nec ingeniiis investigata priorum quaeeque diu latuere, canam; iuvat ire per alta stra, iuvat terris et inerti sede relictanube vehi validique umeris insistere Atlantis palantesque homines passim et rationis egentes despectare procul trepidosque obitumque timentes sic exhortari seriemque evolvere fati!

"O genus attonitum gelidae formidine mortis, quid Styga, quid tenebras et nomina vana timetis, materiem vatum falsique pericula mundi?
corpora, sive rogus flamma seu tabe vetustas METAMORPHOSES BOOK XV

bane), marked off with fillets and with gilded horns, is set before the altar, hears the priest’s prayer, not knowing what it means, watches the barley-meal sprinkled between his horns, barley which he himself laboured to produce, and then, smitten to his death, he stains with his blood the knife which he has perchance already seen reflected in the clear pool. Straightway they tear his entrails from his living breast, view them with care, and seek to find revealed in them the purposes of heaven. Thence (so great is man’s lust for forbidden food!) do you dare thus to feed, O race of mortals! I pray you, do not do it, but turn your minds to these my words of warning, and when you take the flesh of slaughtered cattle in your mouths, know and realize that you are devouring your own fellow-labourers.

“Now, since a god inspires my lips, I will dutifully follow the inspiring god; I’ll open Delphi and the heavens themselves and unlock the oracles of the sublime mind. Great matters, never traced out by the minds of former men, things that have long been hidden, I will sing. It is a delight to take one’s way along the starry firmament and, leaving the earth and its dull regions behind, to ride on the clouds, to take stand on stout Atlas’ shoulders and see far below men wandering aimlessly, devoid of reason, anxious and in fear of the hereafter, thus to exhort them and unroll the book of fate!

“O race of men, stunned with the chilling fear of death, why do you dread the Styx, the shades and empty names, the stuff that poets manufacture, and their fabled sufferings of a world that never was? As for your bodies, whether the burning pyre or long lapse of time with its wasting power shall abstulerit, mala posse pati non ulta putetis!
OVID

morte carent animae semperque priore relictae:
sede novis domibus vivunt habitantque receptae:
ipse ego (nam memini) Troiani tempore belli Panthoides Euphorbus eram, cui pectore quondam haesit in adverso gravis hasta minoris Atridae;
cognovi clipeum, laevae gestamina nostrae, nuper Abanteis templo Iunonis in Argis!
omnia mutantur, nihil interit: errat et illinc huc venit, hinc illic, et quoslibet occupat artus spiritus eque feris humana in corpora transit inque feras noster, nec tempore deperit ullo, utque novis facilis signatur cera figuris nec manet ut fuerat nec formas servat easdem, sed tamen ipsa eadem est, animam sic semper eandem esse, sed in varias doceo migrare figuras.
ergo, ne pietas sit victa cupidine ventris, parcite, vaticinor, cognatas caede nefanda exturbare animas, nec sanguine sanguis alatur!

"Et quoniam magno feror aequore plenaque ventis vela dedi: nihil est toto, quod perstet, in orbe.
cuncta fluunt, omnisque vagans formatur imago;
ipsa quoque adsiduo labuntur tempora motu, non secus ac flumen; neque enim consistere flumen nec levis hora potest: sed utunda inpellitur unda urgueturque eadem veniens urguetque priorem, tempora sic fugiunt pariter pariterque sequuntur et nova sunt semper; nam quod fuit ante, relictum
est
fitque, quod haut fuerat, momentaque cuncta novantur.

376
have consumed them, be sure they cannot suffer any ills. Our souls are deathless, and ever, when they have left their former seat, do they live in new abodes and dwell in the bodies that have received them. I myself (for I well remember it) at the time of the Trojan war was Euphorbus, son of Panthoüs, in whose breast once hung the heavy spear of the younger Atrides. Recently, in Juno's temple in Argos, Abas' city, I recognized the shield which I once wore on my left arm! All things are changing; nothing dies. The spirit wanders, comes now here, now there, and occupies whatever frame it pleases. From beasts it passes into human bodies, and from our bodies into beasts, but never perishes. And, as the pliant wax is stamped with new designs, does not remain as it was before nor keep the same form long, but is still the selfsame wax, so do I teach that the soul is ever the same, though it passes into ever-changing bodies. Therefore, lest your piety be overcome by appetite, I warn you as a seer, do not drive out by impious slaughter what may be kindred souls, and let not life be fed on life.

"And since I am embarked on the boundless sea and have spread my full sails to the winds, there is nothing in all the world that keeps its form. All things are in a state of flux, and everything is brought into being with a changing nature. Time itself flows on in constant motion, just like a river. For neither the river nor the swift hour can stop its course; but, as wave is pushed on by wave, and as each wave as it comes is both pressed on and itself presses the wave in front, so time both flees and follows and is ever new. For that which once existed is no more, and that which was not has come to be; and so the whole round of motion is gone through again.
“Cernis et emensas in lucem tendere noctes, et iubar hoc nitidum nigrae succedere nocti; nec color est idem caelo, cum lassa quiete cuncta iacent media cumque albo Lucifer exit clarus equo rursusque alius, cum praevia lucis tradendum Phoebo Pallantias inscit orbem. ipse dei clipeus, terra cum tollitur ima, mane rubet, terraque rubet cum conditur ima, candidus in summo est, melior natura quod illie aetheris est terraeque procul contagia fugit. nec par aut eadem nocturnae forma Dianae esse potest umquam semperque hodierna sequente, si crescit, minor est, maior, si contrahit orbem. "Quid? non in species succedere quattuor annum adspicis, aetatis peragentem imitamina nostrae? nam tener et lactens puerique simillimus aevi vero novo est: tunc herba nitens et roboris expers turget et insolida est et spe delectat agrestes; omnia tunc florent, florumque coloribus almus ludit ager, neque adhuc virtus in frondibus ulla est. transit in aestatem post ver robustior annus fitque valens iuvenis: neque enim robustior aetas ulla nec uberior, nec quae magis ardeat, ulla est. excipit autumnus, posito fervore iuventae maturus mitisque inter iuvenemque senemque temperie medius, sparsus quoque tempora canis. inde senilis hiems tremulo venit horrida passu, aut spoliata suos, aut, quos habet, alba capillos.
"You see how the spent nights speed on to dawn, and how the sun's bright rays succeed the darkness of the night. Nor have the heavens the same appearance when all things, wearied with toil, lie at rest at midnight and when bright Lucifer comes out on his snowy steed; there is still another aspect when Pallantias,1 herald of the morning, stains the sky bright for Phoebus' coming. The god's round shield itself is red in the morning when it rises from beneath the earth and is red when it is hidden beneath the earth again; but in its zenith it is white, because there the air is of purer substance and it is far removed from the debasing presence of the earth. Nor has Diana, goddess of the night, the same phase always. She is always less to-day than she will be to-morrow if she is waxing, but greater if she is waning.

"Then again, do you not see the year assuming four aspects, in imitation of our own lifetime? For in early spring it is tender and full of fresh life, just like a little child; at that time the herbage is bright, swelling with life, but as yet without strength and solidity, and fills the farmers with joyful expectation. Then all things are in bloom and the fertile fields run riot with their bright-coloured blossoms; but as yet there is no strength in the green foliage. After spring has passed, the year, grown more sturdy, passes into summer and becomes like a strong young man. For there is no hardier time than this, none more abounding in rich, warm life. Then autumn comes, with its first flush of youth gone, but ripe and mellow, midway in mood between youth and age, with sprinkled grey showing on the temples. And then comes aged winter, with faltering step and shivering, its locks all gone or hoary.

1 Aurora, see Index.
"Nostra quoque ipsorum semper requieque sine ulla corpora vertuntur, nec quod fuimusve sumusve, cras erimus; fuit illa dies, qua semina tantum spesque hominum primae matris habitavimus alvo: artifices natura manus admovit et angi corpora visceribus distentae condita matris noluit eque domo vacuas emisit in auras. editus in lucem iacuit sine viribus infans; mox quadrupes rituque tuit sua membra ferarum, paulatimque tremens et nondum poplite firmo constitit adiutis aliquo conamine nervis. inde valens veloxque fuit spatiumque juventae transit et emeritis mediique quoque temporis annis labitur occiduae per iter declive senectae. subruit haec aevi demoliturque prioris robora: fletque Milon senior, cum spectat inanes, illos, qui fuerant solidorum mole tororum Herculeis similes, fluidos pendere lacertos; flet quoque, ut in speculo rugas adspexit aniles, Tyndaris et secum, cur sit bis rapta, requirit. tempus edax rerum, tuque, invidiosa vetustas, omnia destruitis vitiataque dentibus aevi paulatim lenta consumitis omnia morte!

"Haec quoque non perstant, quae nos elementa vocamus, quasque vices peragant, animos adhibete: docebo. quattuor aeternus genitalia corpora mundus continet; ex illis duo sunt onerosa suoque pondere in inferius, tellus atque unda, feruntur, et totidem gravitate carent nulloque premente
"Our own bodies also go through a ceaseless round of change, nor what we have been or are to-day shall we be to-morrow. There was a time when we lay in our first mother's womb, mere seeds and hopes of men. Then Nature wrought with her cunning hands, willed not that our bodies should lie cramped in our strained mother's body, and from our home sent us forth into the free air. Thus brought forth into the light, the infant lay without strength; but soon it lifted itself up on all fours after the manner of the beasts; then gradually in a wabbling, weak-kneed fashion it stood erect, supported by some convenient prop. Thereafter, strong and fleet, it passed over the span of youth; and when the years of middle life also have been spent, it glides along the downhill path of declining age. This undermines and pulls down the strength of former years; and Milon, grown old, weeps when he looks at those arms, which once had been like the arms of Hercules with their firm mass of muscles, and sees them now hanging weak and flabby. Helen also weeps when she sees her aged wrinkles in the looking-glass, and tearfully asks herself why she should twice have been a lover's prey. O Time, thou great devourer, and thou, envious Age, together you destroy all things; and, slowly gnawing with your teeth, you finally consume all things in lingering death!

"And even those things which we call elements do not persist. What changes they undergo, listen and I will tell you. In the eternal universe there are four elemental substances. Two of these, earth and water, are heavy and of their own weight sink down to lower levels. And two, air and fire, purer still than air, are without weight and, if unopposed, fly to the upper realms. These elements, although alta petunt, aer atque aere purior ignis.
quae quamquam spatio distent, tamen omnia sint ex ipsis et in ipsa cadunt: resolutaque tellus in liquidas rarescit aquas, tenuatus in auras aeraque umor abit, dempto quoque pondere rursus in superos aer tenuissimus emicat ignes; inde retro redeunt, idemque reexitur ordo.
ignis enim densum spissatum in aera transit,
hic in aquas, tellus glomerata cogit unda.

“Nec species sua cuique manet, rerumque novatrix ex aliis alias reparat natura figuras:
nec perit in toto quicquam, mihi credite, mundo, seal variat faciemque novat, nascique vocatur incipere esse aliud, quam quod fuit ante, morisque desinere illud idem. cum sint huc forsitan illa, haec translata illuc, summa tamen omnia constant.

“Nil equidem durare diu sub imagine eadem crediderim: sic ad ferrum venistis ab auro, saecula, sic totiens versa est fortuna locorum.
vidi ego, quod fuerat quondam solidissima tellus, esse fretum, vidi factas ex aequore terras;
et procul a pelago conchae iacuere marinae, et vetus inventa est in montibus ancora summis; 265 quodque fuit campus, vallem decursus aquarum fecit, et eluvie mons est deductus in aequor, eque paludosa siccis humus aret harenis, quaque sitim tulerant, stagnata paludibus uement.
hic fontes natura novos emitit, at illie clausit, et aut imis commota tremoribus orbis far separate in position, nevertheless are all derived each from the other, and each into other falls back again. The element of earth, set free, is rarefied into liquid water, and, thinned still further, the water changes into wind and air. Then, losing weight again, this air, already very thin, leaps up to fire, the highest place of all. Then they come back again in reversed order; for fire, condensed, passes into thick air, thence into water; and water, packed together, solidifies into earth.

"Nothing retains its own form; but Nature, the great renewer, ever makes up forms from other forms. Be sure there's nothing perishes in the whole universe; it does but vary and renew its form. What we call birth is but a beginning to be other than what one was before; and death is but cessation of a former state. Though, perchance, things may shift from there to here and here to there, still do all things in their sum total remain unchanged.

"Nothing, I feel sure, lasts long under the same appearance. Thus the ages have come from gold to iron; thus often has the condition of places changed. I have myself seen what once was solid land changed into sea; and again I have seen land made from the sea. Sea-shells have been seen lying far from the ocean, and an ancient anchor has been found on a mountain-top. What once was a level plain, down-flowing waters have made into a valley; and hills by the force of floods have been washed into the sea. What was once marsh is now a parched stretch of dry sand, and what once was dry and thirsty now is a marshy pool. Here Nature sends forth fresh fountains, there seals them up; and rivers, stirred by some inward quakings of the flumina prosiliunt, aut exsiccata residunt.
sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu, existit procul hinc aliquo renascitur ore;
sic modo conhibitur, tecto modo gurgite lapsus 275 redditur Argolicis ingens Erasinus in arvis, et Mysum capitisque sui ripaeque prioris paenituisse fercunt, alia nunc ire Caicum; nec non Sicanias volvens Amenanus harenas nunc fluit, interdum suppressis fontibus aret. 280 ante bibebatur, nunc, quas contingere nolis, fundit Anigrus aquas, postquam, nisi vatibus omnis eripienda fides, illie lavere bimembres vulnera, clavigeri quae fecerat Herculis arcus.
 quid? non et Scythicis Hypanis de montibus ortus, qui fuerat dulcis, salibus vitiatur amaris? 286
"Fluctibus ambitae fuerant Antissa Pharosque et Phoenissa Tyros: quorum nunc insula nulla est.
Leucada continuam veteres habuere coloni:
nunc freta circueunt; Zancle quoque iuncta suisse dicitur Italiae, donec confinia pontus 291 abstulit et media tellurem reppulit unda;
 si quaeras Helicen et Burin, Achaidas urbes, invenes sub aquis, et adhuc ostendere nautae inclinata solent cum moenibus oppida mersis. 295 est prope Pittheam tumulus Troezena, sine ullis arduus arboribus, quondam planissima campi area, nunc tumulus; nam (res horrenda relatu) vis fera ventorum, caecis inclusa cavernis, exspirare aliqua cupiens luctataque frustra 300 384
earth, leap forth or, dried up, sink out of sight. So, when Lycus is swallowed up by the yawning earth, he emerges far away and springs forth again with different appearance. So Erasinus is now engulfed and now, gliding along in a hidden stream, reappears as a lordly river in the Argolic fields. And they say that the Mysus, ashamed of his source and former banks, now flows in another region as Caicus. The Amenanus now flows full over the Sicilian sands, and at times, its sources quenched, is dry. The Anigrus was once wholesome to drink, but now it pours down waters which you would not wish to taste since there (unless all credence is to be denied to bards) the twi-formed centaurs bathed their wounds which the arrows of club-bearing Hercules had dealt. Further, is not the Hypanis, sprung from the Scythian mountains, which once was fresh and sweet, now spoilt with brackish water?

"Antissa and Pharos and Phoenician Tyre were once surrounded by the waters of the sea; but now not one of them is an island. The old inhabitants of that region once possessed Leucas as part of the mainland; but now the waves wash clear around it. Zancle also is said to have been a part of Italy until the sea washed away their common boundary and thrust back the land by the intervening water. If you seek for Helice and Buris, once cities of Achaia, you will find them beneath the waves; and the sailors still show you the sloping cities with their buried walls. Near Troezen, ruled by Pittheus, there is a hill, high and treeless, which once was a perfectly level plain, but now a hill; for (horrible to relate) the wild forces of the winds, shut up in dark regions underground, seeking an outlet for their flowing and striving vainly to obtain a liberiore frui caelo, cum carcere rima nulla foret toto nec pervia flatibus esset, extentam tumefecit humum, ceu spiritus oris tendere vesicam solet aut derepta bicorni terga capro; tumor ille loci permansit et alti collis habet speciem longoque induruit aevo.

"Plurima cum subeant audita et cognita nobis, pauca super referam. quid? non et lympha figuras datque capiteque novas? medio tua, corniger Ammon, unda die gelida est, ortuque obituque calescit admotis Athamanas aquis accendere lignum narratur, minimos cum luna recessit in orbis.
flumen habent Cicones, quod potum saxea reddit viscera, quod tactis inducit marmora rebus; Crathis et hine Sybaris nostris conterminus oris electro similes faciunt auroque capillos; quodquemagismirumest, sunt, quinon corporatantum, verum animos etiam valeant mutare liquores:
cui non audita est obscenae Salmacis undae Aethiopesque lacus? quos si quis faucibus hausit, aut furit aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem; Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levavit, vina fugit gaudetque meris abstemius undis, seu vis est in aqua calido contraria vino, sive, quod indigenae memorant, Amythaone natus, Proetidas attotitas postquam per carmen et herbas eripuit furiis, purgamina mentis in illas misit aquas, odiumque meri permansit in undis.
huic fluit effectu dispar Lyncestius amnis, freer space, since there was no chink in all their prison through which their breath could go, puffed out and stretched the ground, just as when one inflates a bladder with his breath, or the skin of a horned goat. That swelling in the ground remained, has still the appearance of a high hill, and has hardened as the years went by.

“Though many instances that I have heard of and known suggest themselves to me, I shall tell but a few more. Why, does not even water give and receive strange forms? Thy stream, horned Ammon, at midday is cold, but warm in the morning and at eventide; and they say that the Athamanians set wood on fire by pouring water on it when the moon has reached her last point of waning. The Cicones have a river whose waters, if drunk, turn the vitals into stone, make marble of everything they touch. Crathis and Sybaris, a stream not far from our own region, make hair like amber and gold; and, what is still more wonderful, there are streams whose waters have power to change not alone the body, but the mind as well. Who has not heard of the ill-famed waves of Salmacis and of the Aethiopian lakes? Whoever drinks of these waters either goes raving mad or falls into a strange, deep lethargy. Whoever slakes his thirst from Clitor's spring shuns the wine-cup and abstemiously enjoys pure water only; whether there is a power in the water which counteracts the heating wine, or whether, as the natives say, Amythaon's son,1 after he had freed the frenzied daughters of Proetus of madness by his magic songs and herbs, threw into those waters his mind-purifying herbs, and the hate of wine remained in the spring. The Lyncestian river produces

1 Melampus.
OVID

quem quicumque parum moderato gutture traxit, 330 haut aliter titubat, quam si mera vina bibisset.
est locus Arcadiae, Pheneon dixere priores, ambiguis suspectus aquis, quas nocte timeto:
nocete nocent potae, sine roxa luce bibuntur;
sic alias aliasque lacus et flumina vires 335 conciipient.—tempusque fuit, quo navit in undis, nunc sedet Ortygie; timuit concursibus Argo undarum sparsas Symplegadas elisarum, quae nunc inmotae perstant ventisque resistunt.
ne eae sulphureis ardet fornacibus Aetna, 340
ignea semper erit, neque enim fuit ignea semper.
nam sive est animal tellus et vivit habetque spiramenta locis flammam exhalantia multis, spirandi mutare vias, quotiensque movetur, has finire potest, illas aperire cavernas; 345 sive leves imis venti cohistentur in antris saxaque cum saxis et habentem seminaflammæ materiam iactant, ea concipit ictibus ignem, antra relinquentur sedatis frigida ventis;
sive bitumineæ rapiunt incendia vires, 350 luteave exiguis ardescunt sulphura fumis, nempe, ubi terra cibos alimentaque pinguia flammæ non dabit absumptis per longum viribus aevum, naturaeque suum nutrimen deerit edaci, non feret illa famem desertaque deseret ignis. 355
"Esse viros fama est in Hyperborea Pallene, qui soleant levibus velari corpora plumis, an effect the opposite of this; for if one drinks too copiously of its waters, he staggers in his walk just as if he had drunk undiluted wine. There is a place in Arcadia which the ancients called Pheneus, mistrusted for its uncertain waters. Shun them by night, for, drunk by night, they are injurious; but in the daytime they may be drunk without harm. So lakes and streams have now these, now those effects. There was a time when Ortygia floated on the waves, but now she stands firm. The Argo feared the Symplegades, which at that time clashed together with high-flung spray; but now they stand immovable and resist the winds. And Aetna, which now glows hot with her sulphurous furnaces, will not always be on fire, neither was it always full of fire as now. For if the earth is of the nature of an animal, living and having many breathing-holes which exhale flames, she can change her breathing-places and, as often as she shakes herself, can close up these and open other holes; or if swift winds are penned up in deep caverns and drive rocks against rocks and substance containing the seeds of flame, and this catches fire from the friction of the stones, still the caves will become cool again when the winds have spent their force; or if it is pitchy substances that cause the fire, and yellow sulphur, burning with scarce-seen flames, surely, when the earth shall no longer furnish food and rich sustenance for the fire, and its strength after long ages has been exhausted, and greedy Nature shall feel lack of her own nourishment, then she will not endure hunger and, being deserted, will desert her fires.

"There is a story of certain men in Hyperborean Pallene who gain a covering of light feathers for their bodies after they have nine times plunged in cum Tritoniacam noviens subiere paludem; haut equidem credo: sparsae quoque membra venenis exercere artes Scythides memorantur easdem. 360

"Siqua fides rebus tamen est addenda probatis, nonne vides, quaecumque mora fluidove calore corpora tabuerint, in parva animalia verti? in scrobe delectos maclatos obrue tauros (cognita res usu): de putri viscere passim 365 florilegae nascuntur apes, quae more parentum rura colunt operique favent in spemque laborant.
pressus humo bellator equus crabronis origo est;
concava litoreo si demas bracchia cancro, cetera supponas terrae, de parte sepulta 370 scorpius exibit caudaque minabitur unca;
quaeque solent canis frondes intexere filis agrestes tinea (res observata colonis), ferali mutant cum papilione figuram.

"Semina limus habet virides generantia ranas, 375 et generat truncas pedibus, mox apta nata crura dat, utque eadem sint longis saltibus apta, posterior partes superat mensura priores.
nec catulus, partu quem reddidit ursa recenti, sed male viva caro est; lambendo mater in artus 380 fingit et in formam, quantam capit ipsa, reducit.
nonne vides, quos cera tegit sexangula fetus melliferarum apium sine membris corpora nasci 390
Minerva's pool. I do not vouch for it, but the Scythian women also are said to sprinkle their bodies with certain magic juices and produce the same effect.

"Still, if credence is to be given to things that have actually been tested, do you not see that, when-ever dead bodies by lapse of time or by the liquefying power of heat have become thoroughly putrid, tiny animals are bred in them? Bury the carcasses of choice bulls in a ditch after they have been offered in sacrifice (it is a well-known experiment), and from the putrid entrails everywhere will spring flower-culling bees which, after the fashion of their progenitors, frequent the country fields, are fond of work, and toil in hope of their reward. A horse, which is a warlike animal, buried in the ground will produce hornets. If you cut off the hollow claws of a sea-crab and bury the rest in the ground, from the buried part a scorpion will come forth threatening with his hooked tail. And worms that weave their white cocoons on the leaves of trees (a fact well known to country-folk) change into funereal butterflies.¹

"Slimy mud contains seeds that produce green frogs, without legs at first, but soon it gives them legs adapted to swimming, and, that these may be fitted for taking long leaps also, the hind-legs are longer than the fore. A cub that a she-bear has just brought forth is not a cub, but a scarce-living lump of flesh; but the mother licks it into shape, and in this way gives it as much of a form as she has herself. Do you not see how the larvae of the honey-bearing bees, which the hexagonal waxen cell protects, are

¹ The departed soul is sometimes represented on tombstones as a butterfly.
et serosque pedes serasque adsumere pennas?
Iunonis volucrem, quae cauda sidera portat, armigerumque Iovis Cythereidasque columbas et genus omne avium mediis e partibus ovi, ni sciret fieri, quis nasci posse putaret?
sunt qui, cum clauso putrefacta est spina sepulcro, mutari credant humanas angue medullas.

"Haec tamen ex aliis generis primordia ducunt, una est, quae reparet seque ipsa reseminet, ales:
Assyrii phoenica vocant; non fruge neque herbis, sed turis lacrimis et suco vivit amomi.
haec ubi quinque suae couplevit saecula vitae, ilicet in ramis tremulaeque cacumine palmae unguibus et puro nidum sibi construit ore, quo simul ac casias et nardi lenis aristas quassaque cum fulva substravit cinnama murra, se super inponit fruitque in odoribus aevum.
inde ferunt, totidem qui vivere debeat annos, corpore de patrio parvum phoenica renasci;
cum dedit huic actas vires, onerique ferendo est, ponderibus nidi ramos levat arboris altae fertque pius cunasque suas patriumque sepulcrum perque leves auras Hyperionis urbe potitus ante fores sacras Hyperionis aede reponit.

"Si tamen est aliquid mirae novitatis in istis, alternare vices et, quae modo femina tergo passa marem est, nunc esse marem miremur hyaenam;
born mere memberless bodies and later put on feet and wings? Juno’s bird, which wears starry spots on its tail, and the weapon-bearing bird of Jove, and Cytherea’s doves, and the whole family of birds— who would believe, who did not know the facts, that these could be born from the inside of an egg? There are some who think that when the backbone of a man has decomposed in the narrow tomb the spinal marrow is changed into a snake.

“Now all these things get their life’s beginning from some other creature; but there is one bird which itself renews and reproduces its own being. The Assyrians call it the phoenix. It does not live on seeds and green things, but on the gum of frankincense and the juices of amomum. This bird, you may know, when it has completed five centuries of its life, builds for itself a nest in the topmost branches of a waving palm-tree, using his talons and his clean beak; and when he has covered this over with cassiabark and spikes of smooth nard, broken cinnamon and yellow myrrh, he takes his place upon it and so ends his life amidst the odours. And from his father’s body, so they say, a little phoenix springs up which is destined to attain the same length of years. When age has given him strength, and he is able to carry burdens, he relieves the tall palm’s branches of the heavy nest, piously bears his own cradle and his father’s tomb through the thin air, until, having reached the city of the Sun, he lays the nest down before the sacred doors of the Sun’s temple.

“But if there is anything to wonder at in such novelties as these, we might wonder that the hyena changes her nature and that a creature which was but now a female and mated with a male is now a id quoque, quod ventis animal nutritur et aura, 411 protinus adsimulat, tetigit quoscumque color.
victa racemifero lycas dedit India Baccho:
e quibus, ut memorant, quicquid vesica remisit, vertitar in lapides et congelat aere tacto. 415 sic et curalium quo primum contigit auras tempore, durescit: mollis fuit herba sub undis.
"Desinet ante dies et in alto Phoebus anhelos aequore tinguet equos, quam consequar omnia verbis in species translata novas: sic tempora verti cernimus atque illas adsumere robora gentes, concidere has; sic magna fuit censuque virisque perque decem potuit tantum dare sanguinis annos, nunc humilis veteres tantummodo Troia ruinas et pro divitiis tumulos ostendit avorum; claira fuit Sparte, magnae viguere Mycenae, nect non et Cucropis, nec non Amphionis arces.
[vile solum Sparte est, altae cecidere Mycenae, Oedipodioniae quid sunt, nisi nomina, Thebae?
quid Pandioniae restant, nisi nomen, Athenae?] 430
nunc quoque Dardaniam fama est consurgere Romam, Appenninigenae quae proxima Thyridis undis mole sub ingenti rerum fundamina ponit:
haec igitur formam crescendo mutat et olim inmensi caput orbis erit! sic dicere vates faticinasque ferunt sortes, quantumque recordor, dixerat Aeneae, cum res Troiana labaret, Priamides Helenus flenti dubioque salutis:
’nate dea, si nota satis praesagia nostrae mentis habes, non tota cadet te sospite Troia’ 440 394
male herself. That little animal,\(^1\) also, which gets its nourishment from wind and air immediately takes the colour of whatever thing it rests upon. Conquered India gave to cluster-crowned Bacchus some lynxes as a present, whose watery secretions, as they say, change into stones and harden in contact with the air. So also coral hardens at the first touch of air, whereas it was a soft plant beneath the water.

"The day will come to an end and Phoebus will bathe his panting horses in the deep waters of the sea before I tell of all the things which have assumed new forms. So we see times changing, and some nations putting on new strength and others falling into weakness. So was Troy great in wealth and men, and for ten years was able to give so freely of her blood; but now, humbled to earth, she has naught to show but ancient ruins, no wealth but ancestral tombs. Sparta was at one time a famous city; great Mycenae flourished, and Cecrops' and Amphion's citadels. Sparta is now a worthless countryside, proud Mycenae has fallen; and what is the Thebes of Oedipus except a name? What is left of Pandion's Athens but a name? And now fame has it that Dardanian Rome is rising, and laying deep and strong foundations by the stream of Tiber sprung from the Apennines. She therefore is changing her form by growth, and some day shall be the capital of the boundless world! So, they tell us, seers and fate-revealing oracles are declaring. And, as I myself remember, when Troy was tottering to her fall, Helenus, the son of Priam, said to Aeneas, who was weeping and doubtful of his fate: 'O son of Venus, if you keep well in mind my soul's prophetic visions, while you live Troy shall not wholly

\(^1\) The chameleon.
flamma tibi ferrumque dabunt iter: ibis et una Pergama rapta feres, donec Troiaeque tibique externum patria contingat amicius arvum, urbem et iam cerno Phrygios debere nepotes, quanta nec est nec erit nec visa prioribus annis. 445 hanc alii proceres per saecula longa potentem, seb dominam rerum de sanguine natus Iuli efficiet, quo cum tellus erit usa, fruentur aetheriae sedes, caelumque erit exitus illi.'
haec Helenum cecinisse penatigero Aeneae mente memor refero cognataque moenia laetor crescere et utiliter Phrygibus vississe Pelasgos.

"Ne tamen oblitis ad metam tendere longe exspatiemur equis, caelum et quodcunque sub illo
est,
inmutat formas, tellusque et quicquid in illa est, 455 nos quoque, pars mundi, quoniam non corpora solum, verum etiam volucres animae sumus, inque ferinas possimus ire domos pecudumque in corpora condi.
corpora, quae possint animas habuisse parentum aut fratrum aut aliquo iunctorum foedere nobis 460 aut hominum certe, tuta esse et honesta sinamus neve Thyesteis cumulemus viscera mensis!
quam male consuecit, quam se parat ille cruori inpius humano, vituli qui guttura ferro rumpit et inmotas praebet mugitibus aures, 465 aut qui vagitus similes puerilibus haedum edentem iugulare potest aut alite vesci, cui dedit ipse cibos! quantum est, quod desit in istis 396
perish! Fire and sword shall give way before you. You shall go forth and with you shall you catch up and bear away your Pergama, until you shall find a foreign land, kinder to Troy and you than your own country. I see even now a city destined to the descendants of the Phrygians, than which none greater is or shall be, or has been in past ages. Other princes through the long centuries shall make her powerful, but a prince sprung from Iulus’ blood shall make her mistress of the world. When earth shall have had her share of him, the celestial regions shall enjoy him and heaven shall be his goal.’ These things I well remember that Helenus prophesied to Aeneas as he bore with him his guardian gods, and I rejoice that my kindred walls are rising and that the Greeks conquered to the profit of the Phrygians.

“But, not to wander too far out of my course, my steeds forgetting meanwhile to speed towards the goal, the heavens and whatever is beneath the heavens change their forms, the earth and all that is within it. We also change, who are a part of creation, since we are not bodies only but also winged souls, and since we can enter wild-beast forms and be lodged in the bodies of cattle. We should permit bodies which may possibly have sheltered the souls of our parents or brothers or those joined to us by some other bond, or of men at least, to be uninjured and respected, and not load our stomachs as with a Thyestean banquet! What an evil habit he is forming, how surely is he impiously preparing to shed human blood, who cuts a calf’s throat with the knife and listens all unmoved to its piteous cries! Or who can slay a kid which cries just like a little child, or feed on a bird to which he himself has just given food! How much does such a deed as that fall short ad plenun facinus? quo transitus inde paratur?

bos aret aut mortem senioribus inputet annis, horriferum contra borean ovis arma ministret, ubera dent sature manibus pressanda capellae!

retia cum pedicis laqueosque artesque dolosas tollite! nec volucreni viscata fallite virga nec formidatis cervos inludite pinnis nec celate cibis uncos fallacibus ham ;

perdite siqua nocent, verum haec quoque perdite tantum:

ora vacent epulis alimentaque mitia carpan!

Talibus atque aliis instructo pectore dictis in patriam remeasse ferunt ultroque petitum accepisse Numam populi Latialis habenas.

coniuge qui felix nympha ducibusque Camenis sacrificios docuit ritus gentemque feroci adsuetam bello pacis traduxit ad artes.

qui postquam senior regnumque aevumque peregit, extinctum Latiacque nurus populusque patresque deflevere Numam; nam coniunx urbe relieta vallis Aricinae densis latet abdita silvis sacraque Oresteae gemitu questuque Dianae inpedit. a! quotiens nymphae nemorisque lacusque, ne faceret, monuere et consolantia verba dixerunt! quotiens flenti Theseius heros

"siste modum," dixit "neque enim fortuna querenda sola tua est; similes aliorum respice casus:

mitius ista feres, utinamque exempla dolentem non mea te possent relevare! sed et mea possunt.

of actual murder? What is the end of such a course? Let the bull plow and let him owe his death to length of days; let the sheep arm you against the rough north wind; let the she-goats give full udders to the milking. Have done with nets and traps, snares and deceptive arts. Catch not the bird with the limed twig; no longer hem in the deer with fear-compelling feathers,\(^1\) nor conceal the barbed hook beneath fair-seeming food. Kill creatures that work you harm, but even in the case of these let killing suffice. Make not their flesh your food, but seek a more harmless nourishment."

They say that Numa, with mind filled with these and other teachings, returned to his own land and, being urged thereto, assumed the guidance of the Latin state. He, blessed with a nymph\(^2\) for wife, blessed with the Muses' guidance, taught holy rites and trained a fierce, warlike people in the arts of peace. When he, now ripe in years, laid down his sceptre and his life, the Latin mothers, the commons, and the fathers all mourned for the departed Numa. For his wife fled from the city and hid herself away in the dense forests of the Arician vale, and by her groans and lamentations she disturbed the worship of Orestean Diana. Oh, how often the nymphs of wood and lake urged her to desist and spoke words of consolation! How often to the weeping nymph the heroic son of Theseus said: "Have done with tears, for yours is not the only lot to be lamented. Think upon others who have borne equal losses; then will you bear your own more gently. And I would that I had no experience of my own where-with to comfort you in your grief! But even mine can comfort you.

\(^1\) Hung on trees to scare the deer towards the nets. \(^2\) Egeria.
"Fando aliquem Hippolytum vestras, puto, contigit aures credulitate patris, sceleratae fraude novercae occubuisse neci: mirabere, vixque probabo, sed tamen ille ego sum. me Pasiphaeia quondam temptatum frustra patrium temerare cubile, quia voluit, finxit voluisse et, crimiue verso (indiciine metu magis offensane repulsae?) damnavit, meritumque nihil pater eicit urbe hostilique caput prece detestatur euntis.

Pittheam profugo curru Troezena petebam iamque Corinthiacci carpebam litora ponti, cum mare surrexit, cumulusque inmanis aquarum in montis speciem curvari et crescere visus et dare mugitus summoque cacumine findi; corniger hinc taurus ruptis expellitur undis pectoribusque tenus molles erectus in auras aribus et patulo partem maris evomit ore.
corda pavent comitum, mihi mens interrita mansit exiliis intenta suis, cum colla feroce ad freta convertunt adrectisque auribus horrent quadrupedes monstrique metu turbantur et altis praecipitant currum scopulis; ego duceere vana frena manu spumis albentibus oblita luctor et retro lentas tendo resupinus habenas.
nec tamen has vires rabies superasset equorum, ni rota, perpetuum qua circumvertitur axem, stipitis occursu fracta ac disiecta fuisset.
excutior curru, lorisque tenentibus artus viscera viva trahi, nervos in stipe teneri,

400
“You may have heard some mention of Hippolytus, how he met his death through the easy credence of his father and the wiles of his accursed stepmother. You will be amazed and I shall scarce prove my statement, but nevertheless I myself am he. Paphia’s daughter once, when she had tried in vain to tempt me to defile my father’s couch, perverting truth, pretended that I had willed what she herself had willed (was it through fear of discovery or offence at her repulse?), and, guiltless though I was, my father drove me from the city and cursed me as I went with a deadly curse. Banished from home, I was making for Troezen, Pittheus’ city, in my chariot, and now was coursing along the beach of the Corinthian bay, when the sea rose up and a huge mound of water seemed to swell and grow to mountain size, to give forth bellowings, and to be cleft at its highest point. Then the waves burst and a horned bull was cast forth, and, raised from the sea breast-high into the yielding air, he spouted out great quantities of water from his nostrils and wide mouth. The hearts of my companions quaked with fear; but my own soul was untried, filled with its own thoughts of exile. Then suddenly my spirited horses faced towards the sea and, with ears pricked forward, quaked and trembled with fear at the monstrous shape; then dashed with the chariot at headlong speed over the steep, rocky way. I vainly strove to check them with the reins, flecked with white foam, and, leaning backward, strained at the tough thongs. Still would the horses’ mad strength not have surpassed my own had not a wheel, striking its hub against a projecting stock, been broken and wrenched off from the axle. I was thrown from my car, and while the reins held my legs fast, you might membra rapi partim, partim reprensa relinqui, ossa gravem dare fracta sonum fessamque videres exhalari animam nullasque in corpore partes, noscere quas posses: unumque erat omnia vulnus, num potes aut audes cladi conponere nostrae, 530 nympha, tuam? vidi quoque luce carentia regna et lacerum fovi Phlegethontide corpus in unda, nec nisi Apollinaeae valido medicamente prolis reddita vita foret; quam postquam fortibus herbis atque ope Paeonia Dite indignante recepi, tum mihi, ne praesens augerem munere huius invidiam, densas obietit Cynthia nubes, utque forem tutus possemque inpune videri, addidit aetatem nec cognoscenda reliquit ora mihi Cretemque diu dubitavit habendam 540 traderet an Delon: Creta Deloque relictis hic posuit nomenque simul, quod possit equorum admonuisset, iubet deponere 'qui' que 'fuisti Hippolytus,' dixit 'nunc idem Virbius esto!' hoc nemus inde colo de disque minoribus unus 545 numine sub dominae lateo atque accenseor illi.'

Non tamen Egeriae luctus aliena levare damna valent; montisque iacens radicibus imis liquitur in lacrimas, donec pietate dolentis mota soror Phoebi gelidum de corpore fontem 550 fecit et aeternas artus tenuavit in undas.

Et nymphas tetigit nova res, et Amazone natus

402
see my living flesh dragged along, my sinews held on the sharp stake, my limbs partly drawn on and in part caught fast and left behind, and my bones broken with a loud, snapping sound. You might see my spent spirit breathed out and there was no part of my body which you could recognize, but it all was one great wound. Now can you, dare you, nymph, compare your loss with my disaster? Further, I saw the rayless world of death and bathed my torn body in the waves of Phlegethon. And there should I still be had not Apollo’s son by his potent remedies given me back my life. And when I had regained it by the help of strong herbs and medicinal aid, though ’twas against the will of Dis, then Cynthia threw a thick cloud around me, lest I be seen and stir up envy of my gift of life. And, that I might be safe and able to be seen without fear of punishment, she gave me the look of age and left me no features that could be recognized. She debated long whether to give me Crete or Delos for my home. But, deciding against Crete and Delos, she placed me here and bade me lay aside the name which could remind me of my horses, and said: ‘You who were Hippolytus shall now be Virbius.’ From that time I have dwelt within this grove and, one of the lesser deities, I hide beneath my mistress’ deity and am accepted as her follower.”

But Egeria’s grief could not be assuaged by the woes of others, and, lying prostrate at the mountain’s base, she melted away in tears; until Phoebus’ sister, in pity of her faithful sorrow, made her body into a cool spring and dissolved her slender limbs into unfailing streams.

This strange event struck the nymphs with wonder; and the son of the Amazon was no less haut aliter stupuit, quam cum Tyrrhenus arator fatalem glæbam mediis adspexit in arvis sponte sua primum nulloque agitante moveri, sumere mox hominis terraeque amittere formam oraque venturis aperiæ recentia fatis:
indigenae dixere Tagen, qui primus Etruscam edocuit gentem casus aperiæ futuros; utve Palatinis haerentem collibus olim cum subito vidit frondescere Romulus hastam, quæ radice nova, non ferro stabat adacto et iam non telum, sed lenti viminis arbor non exspectatas dabat admirantibus umbras; aut sua fluminea cum vidit Cipus in unda cornua (vidit enim) falsamque in imagine credens esse fidelm, digitis ad frontem sæpe relatis, quæ vidit, tetigit, nec iam sua lumina damnans restitit, ut victor domito veniebat ab hoste, ad caelumque manus et eodem lumina tollens
"quicquid," ait "superi, monstro portenditur isto, seu laetum est, patriæ laetum populoque Quirini, sive minax, mihi sit." viridique e caespite factas placat odoratis herbosas ignibus aras vinaque dat pateris mactatarumque bidentum, quid sibi significent, trepidantia consulit exta;
quæ simul adspexit Tyrrhenæ gentis haruspex, magna quidem rerum molimina vidit in illis, non manifesta tamen; cum vero sustulit acre
a pecudis fibris ad Cipì cornua lumen,
"rex," ait "o! salve! tibi enim, tibi, Cipe, tuisque amazed than was the Tyrrhene plowman when he saw in his fields a clod, big with fate, first moving of its own accord, and with no one touching it, then taking on the form of man and losing its earthy shape, and finally opening its new-made mouth to speak things that were to be. The natives called him Tages, who first taught the Etruscan race how to read the future. And no less amazed than was Romulus when of old he saw his spear, which he had planted on the Palatine hill, suddenly putting forth leaves, and standing, not with iron point driven in the earth, but with new-grown roots; and now 'twas not a spear at all, but a tough-fibred tree, giving unexpected shade to those who gazed on it in wonder; or than was Cipus when in the river water he saw horns springing from his head. For he saw them and, thinking that he was deceived by the reflection, lifting his hands again and again to his forehead, he touched what he saw; and now no longer disbelieving his eyes he halted on his triumphal march and lifting his hands and eyes to the heavens cried: "O ye gods, whatever is portended by this monstrous thing, if it be fortunate, let the good fortune befall my country and the people of Quirinus; but if it threaten ill, may the ill be mine." Then, making an altar of green turf, he appeased the gods with a fragrant burnt-offering, made a libation of wine, and consulted the quivering entrails of the slaughtered victims as to what they might mean for him. When the Etruscan seer inspected these he saw the signs of great enterprises there, but not yet clearly visible. But when he raised his keen eyes from the sheep's entrails to the horns of Cipus, he cried: "All hail, O king! for to thee, to thee, Cipus, and to thy horns hic locus et Latiae parebunt cornibus arces.
tu modo rumpe moras portasque intrare patentes adpropera! sic fata iubent; namque urbe receptus rex eris et sceptro tutus potiere perenni.” 585 rettulit ille pedem torvamque a moenibus urbis avertens faciem “procul, a! procul omnia” dixit “talia di pellant! multoque ego iustius aevum exul agam, quam mc videant Capitolia regem.” dixit et extemplo populumque gravemque senatum convocat, ante tamen pacali cornua lauro 59!
velat et aggeribus factis a milite forti insistit priscosque deos e more precatus “est” ait “hic unus, quem vos nisi pellitis urbe, exul erit: is qui sit, signo, non nomine dicam: 595 cornua fronte gerit! quem vobis indicat augur, si Romam intrurit, famularia iura daturum.
ille quidem potuit portas inrumpere apertas, sed nos obstitimus, quamvis coniunctior illo nemo mihi est: vos urbe virum prohibete, Quirites, vel, si dignus erit, gravibus vincite catenis 601
aut finite metum fatalis morte tyranni!”
qualia succinetis, ubi trux insibilat eurus, murmura pinetis sunt, aut qualia fluctus aequorei faciunt, siquis procul audiat illos, 605 tale sonat populus; sed per confusa frementis verba tamen vulgi vox eminet una “quis ille est?”
et spectant frontes praedictaque cornua quaerunt.
rursus ad hos Cipus “quem poscitis,” inquit “habetis”
shall this place and Latium's citadels bow down. Only delay not and make speed to enter the open gates! Such is fate's command; for, received within the city, thou shalt be king and wield the sceptre in safe and endless sway.” He started back and, keeping his gaze stubbornly turned from the city's walls, he said: “Far, oh, far from me may the gods keep every such fate. Better far it is that I should spend my days exiled from home than that the Capitol should see me king.” He spoke and straightway called a joint assembly of the people and the reverend senate. But first he hid his horns with a wreath of peaceful laurel; then, standing on a mound raised by the brave soldiery and praying to the ancient gods according to the rite, he said: “There is one here who will be king unless you drive him from your city. Who he is, not by his name but by a sign I will disclose to you: he wears horns upon his brow! The augur declares that if once he enters Rome he will reduce you to the rank of slaves. He might have forced his way through your gates, for they stand open; but I withstood him, though no one is more closely bound to him than I. Do you, Quirites, keep him from your city, or, if he deserves it, bind him with heavy fetters, or end your fear of the fated tyrant by his death!” At this such a murmur arose among the people as comes from the high-girt pine-groves when the boisterous wind whistles through them, or as the waves of the sea make heard from afar. But, midst the confused words of the murmuring throng, one cry rose clear: “Who is the man?” They looked at each other's foreheads, and sought to find the horns that had been spoken of. Then Cipus spoke again and said: “Him whom you seek you have”; and removing the wreath from et dempta capiti populo prohibente corona exhibuit gemino praesignia tempora cornu. demisere oculos omnes gemitumque dedere atque illud meritis clarum (quis credere possit ?) inviti videre caput : nec honore carere ulterius passi festam inposuere coronam ;
at proceres, quoniam muros intrare vetaris, ruris honorati tantum tibi, Cipe, dedere, quantum depresso subiectis bobus aratro conplecti posses ad finem lucis ab ortu.
cornuaque aeratis miram referentia formam postibus insculpunt, longum mansura per aevum.

Pandite nunc, Musae, praesentia numina vatum, (scitis enim, nec vos fallit spatio sa vetustas,) unde Coroniden circumflua Thybridis alti insula Romuleae sacris adiecerit urbis.

Dira lues quondam Latias vitiaverat auras, pallidaque exsangui squalebant corpora morbo.
funeribus fessi postquam mortalia cernunt temptamenta nihil, nihil artes posse medentum, auxilium caeleste petunt medianque tenentis orbis humum Delphos adeunt, oracula Phoebi, utque salutifera miseris succurrere rebus sorte velit tantaque urbis mala finiat, orant :
et locus et laurus et, quas habet ipse pharetras, intremuere simul, cortinaque reddidit imo hanc adyto vocem paves factaque pectora movit .
his head, while the people sought to stay him, he showed to them his temples marked with the two horns. All cast down their eyes and groaned aloud, and (who could believe it?) reluctantly looked upon that deservedly illustrious head. Then, not suffering him further to stand dishonoured, they replaced upon his head the festal wreath. But the senate, since you might not come within the walls, gave you, Cipus, as a gift of honour, as much land as you could enclose with a yoke of oxen and a plow from dawn till close of day. And the horns in all their wondrous beauty they engraved upon the bronze pillars of the gates, there to remain through all the ages.

Reveal to me now, O Muses, ye ever-helpful divinities of bards (for you know, nor has far-stretching time dimmed your memory), whence did the island bathed by the deep Tiber bring Coronis’ son¹ and set him midst the deities of Rome.

In olden time a deadly pestilence had corrupted Latium’s air, and men’s bodies lay wasting and pale with a ghastly disease. When, weary with caring for the dead, men saw that their human efforts were as nothing, and that the healers’ arts were of no avail, they sought the aid of heaven, and, coming to Delphi, situate in the earth’s central spot, the sacred oracle of Phoebus, they begged that the god would vouchsafe with his health-bringing lots to succour them in their wretchedness and end the woes of their great city. Then did the shrine and the laurel-tree and the quiver which the god himself bears quake together, and the tripod from the inmost shrine gave forth these words and stirred their hearts trembling with fear: “What you seek ¹ Aesculapius.

OVID

"quod petis hinc, propiore loco, Romane, petisses, et pete nune propiore loco: nec Apolline vobis, qui minuat luctus, opus est, sed Apolline nato. ite bonis avibus prolemque accersite nostram." 640

iusa dei prudens postquam accepere senatus, quam colat, explorant, iuvenis Phoebieius urbem, quique petant ventis Epidauria litora, mittunt; quae simul incurva missi tetricere carina, concilium Graiosque patres adiere, darentque, 645 oravere, deum, qui praesens funera gentis finiat Ausoniae: certas ita dicere sortes. dissidet et variat sententia, parsque negandum non putat auxilium, multi retinere suamque non emittere opem nec numina tradere suadent: 650 dum dubitant, seram pepulere crepuscula lucem; umbraque telluris tenebras induxerat orbi, cum deus in somnis opifer consistere visus ante tuum, Romane, torum, sed qualis in aede esse solet, baculumque tenens agreste sinistra 655 caesariem longae dextra deducere barbae et placido tales emittere pectore voces:
"pone metus! veniam simulacraque nostra relinquam. hunc modo serpentem, baculum qui nexibus ambit, perspice et usque nota visu, ut cognoscere possis! 660 vertar in hunc: sed maior ero tantusque videbor, in quantum debent caelestia corpora verti."

extemplo cum voce deus, cum voce deoque somnus abit, somnique fugam lux alma secuta est. postera sidereos aurora fugaverat ignes: 665 from this place you should have sought, O Roman, from a nearer place. And even now seek from that nearer place. Nor have you any need of Apollo to abate your troubles, but of Apollo's son. Go with kindly auspices and call on my son." When the senate, rich in wisdom, heard the commands of the god, they sought in what city the son of Phoebus dwelt, and sent an embassy by ship to seek out the coast of Epidaurus. When the embassy had beached their curved keel upon that shore, they betook them to the council of the Grecian elders and prayed that they would give the god who with his present deity might end the deadly woes of the Ausonian race; for thus the oracle distinctly bade. The elders disagreed and sat with varying minds. Some thought that aid should not be refused; but the many advised to keep their god and not let go the source of their own wealth nor deliver up their deity. And while they sat in doubt the dusk of evening dispelled the lingering day and the darkness spread its shadows over the world. Then did the health-giving god seem in your dreams to stand before your couch, O Roman, even as he is wont to appear in his own temple, holding his rustic staff in his left hand and with his right stroking his flowing beard, and with calm utterance to speak these words: "Fear not! I shall come and leave my shrine. Only look upon this serpent which twines about my staff, and fix it on your sight that you may know it. I shall change myself to this, but shall be larger and shall seem as great as celestial bodies should be when they change." Straightway the god vanished as he spoke, and with the voice and the god sleep vanished too, and the kindly day dawned as sleep fled. The next morning had put the gleaming incerti, quid agant, proceres ad templam petitì conveniunt operosa dei, quaque ipse morari sede velit, signis caelestibus indicet, orant. vix bene desierant, cum cristis aureus altis in serpente de̦̓s praenuntia sibila misit adventuque suo signumque arasque foresque marmoreumque solum fastigiaque aurea movit pectoribusque tenus media sublimis in aede constitit atque oculos circumtulit igne micantes: territa turba pavet, cognovit numina castos evinctus vitta crines albente sacerdos; “en de̦̓s est, de̦̓s est! animis linguisque favete, quisquis adest!” dixit “sis, o pulcherrime, visus utiliter populosque iuves tua sacra colentes!” quisquis adest, iussum venerantur numen, et omnes verba sacerdotis referunt geminata piumque Aeneadae praestant et mente et voce favorem. adnuit his motisque de̦̓s rata pignora cristis et repetita dedit vibrata sibila lingua;
OVID

tum gradibus nitidis delabitur oraque retro flectit et antiquas abiturus respicit aras adsuetasque domos habitataque templam salutat. inde per iniectis adopertam floribus ingens serpit humum flectitque sinus mediumque per urbem tendit ad incurvo munitos aggere portus. restitit hic agmenque suum turbæaque sequentis officium placido visus dimiterre vultu corpus in Ausonia posuit rate: numinis illa stars to flight when the chiefs, still uncertain what to do, assembled at the sumptuous temple of the sought-for god and begged him by heavenly tokens to reveal where he himself wished to abide. Scarce had they ceased to speak when the golden god, in the form of a serpent with high crest, uttered hissing warnings of his presence, and at his coming the statue, altars, doors, the marble pavement and gilded roof, all rocked. Then, raised breast-high in the temple's midst, he stood and gazed about with eyes flashing fire. The terrified multitude quaked with fear; but the priest, with his sacred locks bound with a white fillet, recognized the divinity and cried:

"The god! behold the god! Think holy thoughts and stand in reverent silence, all ye who are in this presence. And, O thou most beautiful, be this vision of thee expedient for us and bless thou this people who worship at thy shrine." All in the divine presence worshipped the god as they were bid, repeating the priest's words after him, and the Romans, too, performed their pious devotions with heart and lips. The god nodded graciously to them and, moving his crest, assured them of his favour and with darting tongue gave forth repeated hisses. Then he glided down the polished steps and with backward gaze looked fixedly upon the ancient altars which he was about to leave, and saluted his well-known home and the shrine where he had dwelt so long. Thence the huge serpent wound his way along the ground covered with scattered flowers, bending and coiling as he went, and proceeded through the city's midst to the harbour guarded by a curving embankment. Here he halted and, seeming with kindly expression to dismiss his throng of pious followers, he took his place within the Ausonian ship. It felt the burden sensit omus, pressa estque dei gravitate carina; Aeneadae gaudent caesoque in litore tauro torta coronatae solvunt retinacula navis.
inplererat levis aura ratem: deus eminet alte inpositaque premens puppim cervice recurvam cacruleas despectat aquas modicusque per aequor Ionium zephyris sextae Pallantidos ortu Italiam tenuit praeterque Lacinia templo nobilitata deae Scylaceaque litora fertur; linquit Iapygium laevisque Amphrisia remis saxa fugit, dextra praerupta Cocinthia parte, Romethiumque legit Caulonaque Narrociamque evindicatque fretum Siculique augusta Pelori Hippotadaceque domos regis Temesesque metallæ Leucosiamque petit tepidique rosaria Paesti, inde legit Capreat promunturiumque Minervae et Surrentino generosos palmitæ colles Herculiamque urbem Stabiasque et in otia natam Parthenopen et ab hac Cumaces templæ Sibyllæ.
hinc calidi fontes lentisciferumque tenetur Liternum multamque trahens sub gurgite harenam Volturnus niveisque frequens Sinussa columbis Minturnæaque graves et quam tumulavit alumnus Antiphataeque domus Trachasque obsessa palude et tellus Circæae et spissi litoris Antium. buc ubi veliferam nautæ advertere carinam, (asper enim iam pontus erat), deus explicat orbes perque sinus crebros et magna volumina labens 414
of the deity and the keel was forced deep down by the god's weight. The Romans were filled with joy and, after sacrificing a bull upon the beach, they wreathed their ship with flowers and cast loose from the shore. A gentle breeze bore the vessel on, while the god, rising on high and reclining heavily with his neck resting upon the ship's curving stern, gazed down upon the azure waters. With fair winds he sailed through the Ionian sea and on the sixth morning he reached Italy, sailed past the shores of Lacinium, famed for Juno's temple, past Scylaceum, left Iapygia behind, and, avoiding the Amphrisian rocks upon the left and the Cocinian crags upon the right, skirted Romethium and Caulon and Narycia; then passed the Sicilian sea and Pelorus' narrow strait, sailed by the home of King Hippotades, past the coppermines of Temesa, and headed for Leucosia and mild Paestum's rose-gardens. Thence he skirted Capreae, Minerva's promontory, and the hills of Surrentum rich in vines; thence sailed to Herculaneum and Stabiae and Parthenope,¹ for soft pleasure founded, and from there to the temple of the Cumaean Sibyl. Next the hot pools ² were reached, and Liternum, thick grown with mastic-bearing trees, and the Volturnus, sweeping along vast quantities of sand beneath its whirling waters; Sinuessa, with its thronging flocks of snow-white doves; wholesome Minturnae and the place ³ named for her whose foster-son ⁴ entombed her there; the home of Antiphates, marsh-encompassed Trachas, Circe's land also, and Antium with its hard-packed shore. When to this place the sailors turned their ship with sails full spread (for the sea was rough) the god unfolded his coils and, gliding on with many a sinuous curve and mighty fold, entered

¹ i.e. Naples. ² Of Baiae. ³ Caieta. ⁴ Aeneas.
templa parentis init flavum tangentia litus.
aequore placato patrias Epidaurius aras linquit et hospicio iuncti sibi numinis usus litoream tractu squamae crepitantis harenam sulcat et innixus moderamine navis in alta puppe caput posuit, donec Castrumque sacrasque Lavini sedes Tiberinaque ad ostia venit.
huc omnis populi passim matrumque patrumque obvia turba ruit, quaeque ignes, Troica, servant, Vesta, tuos, laetoque deum clamore salutant.
quaque per adversas navis cita ducitur undas, tura super ripas aris ex ordine factis parte ab utraque sonant et odorant aera fumis, ictaque coniectos incalfacit hostia cultros.
iamque caput rerum, Romanam intraverat urbem:
erigitur serpens summoque acclinia malo colla movet sedesque sibi circumspicit aptas.
scinditur in geminas partes circumfluus amnis (Insula nomen habet) laterumque a parte duorum porrigit aequales media tellure lacertos:
huc se de Latia pinu Phoebius anguis contulit et finem specie caeleste resumpta luctibus inposuit venitque salutifer urbi.

Hic tamen accessit delubris advena nostris:
Caesar in urbe sua deus est; quem Marte togaque praecipuum non bella magis finita triumphis resque domi gestae properataque gloria rerum in sidus vertere novum stellamque comantem, quam sua progenies; neque enim de Caesaris actis

416
his father's temple set on the tawny strand. When the sea had calmed again, the Epidaurian god left his paternal altars and, having enjoyed the hospitality of his kindred deity, furrowed the sandy shore as he dragged his rasping scales along and, climbing up the rudder, reposed his head on the vessel's lofty stern, until he came to Castrum, the sacred seats of Lavinium and the Tiber's mouth. Hither the whole mass of the populace came thronging to meet him from every side, matrons and fathers and the maids who tend thy fires, O Trojan Vesta, and they saluted the god with joyful cries. And where the swift ship floated up the stream incense burned with a crackling sound on altars built in regular order on both the banks, the air was heavy with sweet perfumes, and the smitten victim warmed the sacrificial knife with his blood. And now the ship had entered Rome, the capital of the world. The serpent raised himself aloft and, resting his head upon the mast's top, moved it from side to side, viewing the places fit for his abode. The river, flowing around, separates at this point into two parts, forming the place called the Island; on each side it stretches out two equal arms with the land between. On this spot the serpent-son of Phoebus disembarked from the Latian ship and, resuming his heavenly form, put an end to the people's woes and came to them as health-bringer to their city.

Now he came to our shrines as a god from a foreign land; but Caesar is god in his own city. Him, illustrious in war and peace, not so much his wars triumphantly achieved, his civic deeds accomplished, and his glory quickly won, changed to a new heavenly body, a flaming star; but still more his offspring deified him. For there is no work among ullum maius opus, quam quod pater exstitit huius: scilicet aequoreos plus est domuisse Britannos perque papyriferi septemflua flumina Nili victrices egisse rates Numidasque rebelles Cinyphiumque Iubam Mithridateisque tumentem 755 nominibus Pontum populo adiecisse Quirini et multos meruisse, aliquos egisse triumphos, quam tantum genuisse virum, quo praeside rerum humano generi, superi, favistis abunde! ne foret hic igitur mortali semine cretus, 760 ille deus faciendus erat; quod ut aurea vidit Aeneae genetrix, vidit quoque triste parari pontifici letum et coniurata arma moveri, palluit et cunctis, ut cuique erat obvia, divis "adspice," dicebat "quanta mihi mole parentur 765 insidia, quantaque caput cum fraude petatur, quod de Dardanio solum mihi restat Iulo. solane semper ero iustis exercita curis, quam modo Tydidae Calydonia vulneret hasta, nunc male defensae confundant moenia Troiae, 770 quae videam natum longis erroribus actum iactariique freto sedesque intrare silentum bellaque cum Turno gerere, aut, si vera fatemur, cum Iunone magis? quid nunc antiqua recordor damna mei generis? timor hic meminisse priorum non sinit; en acui sceleratos cernitis enses? 776 quos prohibete, precor, facinusque repellite neve caede sacerdotis flammas exstinguite Vestae!"
all Caesar's achievements greater than this, that he became the father of this our Emperor. Is it indeed a greater thing to have subdued the sea-girt Britons, to have led his victorious fleet up the seven-mouthed stream of the papyrus-bearing Nile, to have added the rebellious Numidians, Libyan Juba, and Pontus, swelling with threats of the mighty name of Mithridates, to the sway of the people of Quirinus, to have celebrated some triumphs and to have earned many more—than to have begotten so great a man? With him as ruler of the world, you have indeed, O heavenly ones, showered rich blessings upon the human race! So then, that his son might not be born of mortal seed, Caesar must needs be made a god. When the golden mother of Aeneas saw this, and saw also that dire destruction was being plotted against her high-priest and that an armed conspiracy was forming, she paled with fear and cried to all the gods as she met them in turn: "Behold what a crushing weight of plots is prepared against me, and with what snares that life is sought which alone remains to me from Dardanian Iulus. Shall I alone for ever be harassed by well-founded cares, since now the Calydonian spear of Diomede wounds me and now the falling walls of ill-defended Troy o'erwhelm me, since I see my son driven by long wanderings, tossed on the sea, entering the abodes of the silent shades and waging war with Turnus, or, if we speak plain truth, with Juno rather? But why do I now recall the ancient sufferings of my race? This present fear of mine does not permit me to remember former woes. Look! do you not see that impious daggers are being whetted? Ward them off, I pray, prevent this crime and let not Vesta's fires be extinguished by her high-priest's blood!" Talia nequiquam toto Venus anxia caelo verba iacit superosque movet, qui rumpere quamquam ferrea non possunt veterum decreta sororum, 781 signa tamen luctus dant haut incerta futuri;
arma ferunt inter nigras crepitantia nubes terribilesque tubas auditaque cornua caelo praemonuissete nefas; solis quoque tristis imago 785 lurida sollicitis praebebat lumina terris;
saepe faces visae mediis ardere sub astris, saepe inter nimbos guttae cecidere cruentae;
caerulus et vultum ferrugine Lucifer atra sparsus erat, sparsi lunares sanguine currus; 790 tristia mille locis Stygius dedit omina bubo, mille locis lacrimavit ebur, cantusque feruntur auditi sanctis et verba minantia lucis.
victima nulla litat, magnosque instare tumultus libra monet, caesiumque caput reperitur in extis, 795 inque foro circumque domos et templar deorum nocturnos ululasse canes umbrasque silentum erravisse ferunt motamque tremoribus urbem.
non tamen insidias venturaque vincere fata praemonitus potuere deum, strictique feruntur 800 in templum gladii: neque enim locus ullus in urbe ad facinus diramque placet nisi curia caedem.
tum vero Cytherea manu percussit utraque pectus et Aeneaden molitur condere nube, qua prius infesto Paris est ereptus Atridae, 805 et Diomedeos Aeneas fugerat enses. talibus hanc genitor: "sola insuperabile fatum, 420
The anxious goddess cried these complaints throughout the sky, but all in vain. The gods were moved indeed; and although they were not able to break the iron decrees of the ancient sisters, still they gave no uncertain portents of the woe that was at hand. They say that the clashing of arms amid the dark storm-clouds and fear-inspiring trumpets and horns heard in the sky forewarned men of the crime; also the darkened face of the sun shone with lurid light upon the troubled lands. Often firebrands were seen to flash amidst the stars; often drops of blood fell down from the clouds; the morning-star was of dusky hue and his face was blotched with dark red spots, and Luna's chariot was stained with blood. In a thousand places the Stygian owl gave forth his mournful warnings; in a thousand places ivory statues dripped tears, and in the sacred groves wailing notes and threatening words were heard. No victim sufficed for expiation; the liver warned that portentous struggles were at hand and its lobe was found cleft amidst the entrails. In the marketplace and around men's houses and the temples of the gods, they say, dogs howled by night, the shades of the silent dead walked abroad and the city was shaken with earthquakes. Yet even so, the warnings of the gods were unable to check the plots of men and the advancing fates. Naked swords were brought into the sacred curia; for no place in the whole city would do for this crime, this dreadful deed of blood, save only that. Then indeed did Cytherea smite on her breast with both her hands and strive to hide her Caesar in a cloud in which of old Paris had been rescued from the murderous Atrides and in which Aeneas had escaped the sword of Diomede. Then thus the Father spoke: "Dost thou, by thy sole nata, movere paras? intres licet ipsa sororum tecta trium: cernes illis molimine vasto ex aere et solido rerum tabularia ferro, quae neque concussum caeli neque fulminis iram nec metuunt uallas tuta atque aeterna ruinas; invenies illic incisa adamante perenni fata tui generis: legi ipse animoque notavi et referam, ne sis etiamnum ignara futuri.
hic sua conplevit, pro quo, Cytherea, laboras, tempora, perfectis, quos terrae debuit, annis.
ut deus accedat caelo templisque colatur, tu facies natusque suus, qui nominis heres inpositum feret unus onus caesique parentis nos in bella suos fortissimus ultor habebit.
illius auspiciis obsessae moenia pacem victa petent Mutinae, Pharsalia sentiet illum, Emathiiique iterum madefient caede Philippi, et magnum Siculis nomen superabitur undis, Romanique ducis conjunx Aegyptia taedae non bene fisa cadet, frustraque erit illa minata, servitura suo Capitolia nostra Canopo.
quid tibi barbariem gentesque ab utroque iacentes oceano numerem? quodcumque habitabile tellus sustinet, huius erit: pontus quoque serviet illi!

1 i.e. Macedonian; Emathia was a district of Macedonia.
2 Though Philippi is in Macedonia and Pharsalus in Thessaly, Ovid with poetic daring practically identifies the two great battlefields.
power, my daughter, think to move the changeless fates? Thou thyself mayst enter the abode of the three sisters. Thou shalt there behold the records of all that happens on tablets of brass and solid iron, a massive structure, tablets which fear neither the crashings of the sky, nor the lightning’s fearful power, nor any destructive shocks which may befall, being eternal and secure. There shalt thou find engraved on everlasting adamant thy descendant’s fates. I have myself read these and marked them well in mind; and these will I relate, that thou mayst be no longer ignorant of that which is to come. This son of thine, goddess of Cythera, for whom thou griewest, has fulfilled his allotted time, and his years are finished which he owed to earth. That as a god he may enter heaven and have his place in temples on the earth, thou shalt accomplish, thou and his son. He as successor to the name shall bear alone the burden placed on him, and, as the most valiant avenger of his father’s murder, he shall have us as ally for his wars. Under his command the conquered walls of leaguered Mutina shall sue for peace; Pharsalia shall feel his power; Emathian\(^1\) Philippi shall reek again\(^2\) with blood; and he of the great name\(^3\) shall be overcome on Sicilian waters. A Roman general’s Egyptian mistress, who did not well to rely upon the union, shall fall before him, and in vain shall she have threatened that our Capitol shall bow to her Canopus. But why should I recall barbaric lands to you and nations lying on either ocean-shore? Nay, whatsoever habitable land the earth contains shall be his, and the sea also shall come beneath his sway\(^1\)

\(^3\) Sextus Pompeius, youngest son of Pompey the Great. He seems also to have assumed the name Magnus.
"Pace data terris animum ad civilia vertet: iura suum legesque feret iustissimus auctor exemploque suo mores reget inque futuri temporis aetatem venturorumque nepotum prospiciens prolem sancta de coniuge natam ferre simul nomenque suum curasque iubebit, nec nisi cum senior Pylios aequaverit annos, aetherias sedes cognataque sidera tanget. hanc animam interea caeso de corpore raptam fac iubar, ut semper Capitolia nostra forumque divus ab excelsa prospectet Iulius aede!"

Vix ea fatus erat, media cum sede senatus constitit alma Venus nulli cernenda suique Caesaris eripuit membris nec in aera solvi passa recentem animam caelestibus intulit astris dumque tulit, lumen capere atque ignescere sensit emisitque sinu: luna volat altius illa flammiferumque trahens spatioso limite crinem stella micat natique videns bene facta fatetur esse suis maiora et Vinci gaudet ab illo. hic sua praeferri quamquam vetat acta paternis, libera fama tamen nullisque obnoxia iussis invitum praefert unaque in parte repugnat: sic magnus cedit titulis Agamemnonis Atreus, Aegea sic Theseus, sic Pelea vicit Achilles; denique, ut exemplis ipsos aequantibus utar, sic et Saturnus minor est Iove: Iuppiter arces
"When peace has been bestowed upon all lands he shall turn his mind to the rights of citizens, and as a most righteous jurist promote the laws. By his own good example shall he direct the ways of men, and, looking forward to future time and coming generations, he shall bid the son, born of his chaste wife, to bear at once his name and the burden of his cares; and not till after he as an old man shall have equalled Nestor's years shall he attain the heavenly seats and his related stars. Meanwhile do thou catch up this soul from the slain body and make him a star in order that ever it may be the divine Julius who looks forth upon our Capitol and Forum from his lofty temple."

Scarce had he spoken when fostering Venus took her place within the senate-house, unseen of all, caught up the passing soul of her Caesar from his body, and not suffering it to vanish into air, she bore it towards the stars of heaven. And as she bore it she felt it glow and burn, and released it from her bosom. Higher than the moon it mounted up and, leaving behind it a long fiery train, gleamed as a star. And now, beholding the good deeds of his son, he confesses that they are greater than his own, and rejoices to be surpassed by him. And, though the son forbids that his own deeds be set above his father's, still fame, unfettered and obedient to no one's will, exalts him spite of his desire, and in this one thing opposes his commands. So does the great Atreus yield in honour to his son, Agamemnon; so does Theseus rival Aegeus, and Achilles, Peleus; finally, to quote an instance worthy of themselves, is Saturn less than Jove. Jupiter controls the heights

1 Tiberius, son of Livia and Ti. Claudius Nero.
2 i.e. of Julius Caesar.
temperat aetherias et mundi regna triformis, terra sub Augusto est; pater est et rector uterque.
di, precor, Aenaeae comites, quibus ensis et ignis 861 cesserunt, dique Indigetes genitorque Quirine urbis et invicti genitor Gradive Quirini Vestaque Caesareos inter sacra ta penates, 865 et cum Caesarea tu, Phoebe domestice, Vesta, quique tenes altus Tarpeias Iuppiter arces, quosque alios vati fas appellare piumque est:
tarda sit illa dies et nostro serior aevo, qua caput Augustum, quem temperat, orbe relictum accedat caelo faveatque precantibus absens! 870

Iamque opus exegi, quod nec Iovis ira nec ignis nec poterit ferrum nec edax abolere vetustas.
cum volet, illa dies, quae nil nisi corporis huius ius habet, incerti spatium mihi finiat aevi:
parte tamen meliore mei super alta perennis 875 astra ferar, nomenque erit indelebile nostrum, quaque patet domitis Romana potentia terris, ore legar populi, perque omnia saecula fama,
siquid habent veri vaturn praesagia, vivam.
of heaven and the kingdoms of the triformed universe; but the earth is under Augustus' sway. Each is both sire and ruler. O gods, I pray you, comrades of Aeneas, before whom both fire and sword gave way, and ye native gods of Italy, and thou, Quirinus, father of our city, and Gradivus, invincible Quirinus' sire, and Vesta, who hast ever held a sacred place midst Caesar's household gods, and thou Apollo, linked in worship with our Caesar's Vesta, and Jupiter, whose temple sits high on Tarpeia's rock, and all ye other gods to whom it is fitting for the bard to make appeal: far distant be that day and later than our own time when Augustus, abandoning the world he rules, shall mount to heaven and there, removed from our presence, listen to our prayers!

And now my work is done, which neither the wrath of Jove, nor fire, nor sword, nor the gnawing tooth of time shall ever be able to undo. When it will, let that day come which has no power save over this mortal frame, and end the span of my uncertain years. Still in my better part I shall be borne immortal far beyond the lofty stars and I shall have an undying name. Wherever Rome's power extends over the conquered world, I shall have mention on men's lips, and, if the prophecies of bards have any truth, through all the ages shall I live in fame.
INDEX

The references are to books and lines in the Latin text

ABANTIADES, a patronymic epithet of Persens as the great-grandson of Abas, iv. 673

Abaris, a companion of Phineus slain by Perseus, v. 86

Abas: (1) king of Argos, father of Acrisius, great-grandfather of Perseus, iv. 673; (2) a companion of Diomede, changed by Venus into a bird, xiv. 505; (3) a centaur, participant in the battle of the centaurs and Lapithae, xii. 306

Absyrtus, a young brother of Medea, slain by her in order to retard the pursuit of her father, Aeetes, vii. 51

Acastus, king of Thessaly, son of Peleus; granted Peleus absolution from his blood-guiltiness, xi. 409

Acestes, a king in Sicily; entertained Aeneas and his followers, xiv. 83

Achaemenides, a companion of Ulysses, rescued from the Cyclopes by Aeneas, xiv. 161

Achaea, a country in the Northern Peloponnesus, by metonymy Greece, iv. 606; viii. 268; xiii. 325

Acheloë, Callirhoë, daughter of Acheloüs, ix. 413

Acheloïdes, daughters of Acheloüs, the Sirens, xiv. 87

Acheloüs, a river and river-god whose stream separates Aetolia and Acarnania; the god entertains Theseus and his companions on their way home from the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 549 ff.; he has power to change his form, ix. 62 ff.; describes his great fight with Hercules, ix. 4 ff.; while in bull form his horn was torn off and given to Bona Copla, ix. 88

Acheron, a river of the underworld, v. 541; by metonymy, the underworld, xi. 504

Achilles, the most celebrated hero among the Greeks in the Trojan war, son of Peleus, king of Thessaly, and Thetis, a goddess of the sea; account of the wedding of his parents and of his birth, xi. 265; his mother, foreseeing his death if he went to the war, disguised him in girl's clothing and hid him among the maidens at the court of Lycomedes, king of Scyros, where he was discovered by the craft of Ulysses, xiii. 162 ff.; his early conquests while on the way to Troy, among these, Telephus, whom he wounded and afterwards cured, xiii. 173 ff.; his fight with Cycnus, xii. 73 ff.; description of his shield wrought by Vulcan at Thetis' request, xiii. 451
INDEX

291 ff.; he was slain by an arrow of Paris directed by the hand of Apollo, who was instigated by Neptune out of revenge for the Cycnus' death, xii. 606 ff.; his dead body recovered from the battlefield by Ulysses, xiii. 280; his armour was claimed by Ajax and Ulysses, and awarded by the Greek chiefs to Ulysses, xii. 622 ff.; on the Thracian coast where he was buried his ghost appeared to the Greeks, and demanded that Polyxena be sacrificed upon his tomb, xiii. 443 ff.

Acis, son of Faunus and Symaethis, lover of Galatæa, slain by the jealous Cyclops, Polyphemus, and changed to a river-god, xiii. 760, 884 ff.

Acanon, a companion of Diomede, changed by Venus into a bird, xiv. 484

Actaeon, called Hyantius from an ancient name of Bocotia, iii. 147; grandson of Cadmus, son of Autonoe, iii. 198; chased to see Diana in her bath, and fearfully punished therefor, iii. 198 ff.; Pentheus appeals to Autonoe in the name of her murdered son, iii. 720

Actaeus — Atticus, ii. 554, 720; vi. 711; vii. 681; viii. 170

Actium, a promontory in Epirus, made famous by the naval battle near that point between Augustus and Antony, xiii. 715

Actorides, a descendant of Actor, applied to Erytus, v. 79, and to Patroclus, xiii. 273; in plural, Actoridae, referring to Erytus and Cleante, viii. 308

Admetus, see Phereclus

Adonis, son of Myrrha by her father, Cinyras, born after his mother had been transformed into a tree, x. 503 ff.; beloved by Venus because of his extraordinary beauty, x. 524 ff.; slain by a boar, x. 708 ff.; from his blood Venus caused the anemone flower to spring, x. 735

Aeacides, a descendant of Aeacus, applied to his son, Pelus, xi. 227; xii. 565; to his grandson, Achilles, xii. 82, 96, 365; in plural, to his two sons, Pelus and Telamon, viii. 4

Aeacus, son of Jupiter, xiii. 28, and Aegina, grandson of Asopus, born in and ruled over the island of Aegina, which took its name from his mother, vii. 474; refuses to aid Minos against Athens, vii. 484; tells the story of the Myrmidons, vii. 517 ff.; father of Telamon, xiii. 25; made a judge in the Lower World on account of his justice on earth, xiii. 25; his father,
INDEX

Jupiter, cannot grant him immortality on earth, ix. 440
Aeas, a river in Epirus, l. 580
Aetees, king of Colchis, son of Sol and Persa, father of Medea, received from Phrixus the Golden Fleece on the preservation of which his kingdom depended, vii. 7, 69, 170
Acestias, an epithet of Medea as the daughter of Aetees, vii. 9, 326
Aegaeon, a sea-god, n. 10
Aegaeus, the Aegean Sea, ix. 448; xi. 663
Aegens, son of Pandion, king of Athens, father of Theseus, xv. 856; receives Medea after her flight from Corinth and marries her, vii. 403; detects her in her attempt to poison Theseus and drives her out, vii. 420 ff.; being threatened with war by Minos, who sought to avenge the death of his son, Androgeos, he appeals to Aechus for aid, vii. 454 ff.
Aegides, son of Aegens, Theseus, viii. 174, 405, 560; xii. 237, 343
Aegina, daughter of the river-god, Asopus, hence called Asopis, vi. 113; vii. 616; she was loved by Jupiter, who carried her away to the island afterwards called by her name, vii. 474; their son was Aeusus, vii. 524, 615
Aegina, an island in the Saronic Gulf, vii. 474
Aegyptius, belonging to Egypt, v. 323; xv. 826
Aelio, a harpy on the island of the Strophades who made threats against Aeneas, xiii. 710; also the name of a swift-running dog, iii. 219
Aeneades, a descendant of Aeneas; applied to Caesar, xv. 804; in plural, to the Romans in general, xv. 682, 695
Aeneas, son of Anchises and Venus (see Cythereus heros); one of the bravest of the Trojans, xiii. 665; rescued by Venus from the sword of Diomede, xv. 806; leaves Troy with his father and son, xiii. 625; received by Anius at Delos, xiii. 631; meets Dido at Carthage, xiv. 78; his wanderings and sufferings described by Venus, xv. 770 ff.; received by Aetes in Sicily, xiv. 83; meets the Cumaean Sibyl and is conducted by her through the Lower World, xiv. 104 ff.; reaches his journey's end and is kindly received by Latinus, is opposed by Turnus, seeks aid from Evander, xiv. 445 ff.; is drowned in the River Numicins, his mortal part there washed away, and his immortal part made a god and worshipped under the name of Indiges, xiv. 600 ff.
Aelola virgo, daughter of Aeolus, applied to Canace, loved by Neptune, vi. 116
Aelolides, a descendant of Aeolus, applied to his son Athamus, iv. 512; to Sisyphus, xiii. 26; to his grandson Cephalus, vi. 681; vii. 672; to Misenus, the trumpeter of Aeneas (his father, however, was not the god of the winds, but a mortal of the same name), xiv. 103; in plural, to certain sons of Aeolus who committed incest with their sisters, ix. 507
Acolis, a daughter of Aeolus, Alcyone, xi. 444, 573
Aeolius, belonging to Aeolus in Asia Minor, vtt. 357
Aeolus, god of the winds, who kept these shut up in a cave in the Aeolian Isles between Sicily and Italy, l. 262; iv. 663; xiv. 224; 433
INDEX

xv. 707; son of Hippotas, iv. 663; xi. 431; xiv. 224; xv. 707; father of Canace, vi. 116; father of Alcyone, xi. 431, 748; father of Athamas, iv. 487; called Aeolius tyrannus, xiv. 232; calms the waves in the nestling-time of the Halcyons, xi. 748; gave Ulysses winds tied in a bag, xiv. 224. See Hippotades

Aesculapius, half-brother of Hector, son of Alexiost and Priam; because of his hopeless love for Hesperie, he leaped from a cliff into the sea and was changed into a diving-bird, xi. 752 ff.; mourned by Priam and Hector and all his brothers except Paris, xii. 1 ff.

Aesar, a river in Lower Italy, xv. 23, 54

Aesculapius, son of Apollo and Coronis, rescued by Apollo from the body of his dying mother and given to Chiron to rear, ii. 629 ff.; called Coronides, xv. 624; Paeonius, xv. 535; his fate foretold by Ocyrohoe, ii. 635 ff.; he restored the dead Hippolytus to life, xv. 553; was brought to Rome at a time of great pestilence in the form of a serpent and afterwards worshipped there as a god, xv. 626 ff.

Aeson, a Thessalian prince whose brother, Pelias, usurped his throne; father of Jason, vii. 84; in old age he was restored to youth by Medea's magic arts, vii. 162 ff.

Aesonides, Jason, son of Aeson, vii. 60, 77, 164; viii. 411

Aesonius heros, Jason, vii. 156

Aethalion, a Tyrian sailor, companion of Acoetes, iii. 647

Aethion, an Ethiopian seer, v. 146

Aethiopia, reason for the black skins of its people, ii. 236

Aethlops, Etniopian, i. 778; ii. 236; iv. 669; xv. 320

Aethon, one of the horses of the Sun, ii. 153

Aetna, a volcanic mountain in Sicily, xiii. 770; under it lies the giant Typhoeus, v. 352; xiv. 1; the home of Cyclops, xiv. 188

Actola arma, the assistance of Diomed, xiv. 528

Aetolia, a country in Middle Greece, xiv. 461

Aetolius heros, Diomed, xiv. 461

Agamemnon, king of Mycenae, son of Atreus, brother of Menelaus, husband of Clytemnestra, father of Orestes, Iphigenia, and Electra; commander-in-chief of the Greek forces in the Trojan war, hence called rex, xiii. 217, 276; his quarrel with Achilles, xiii. 444; hidden by the oracle, while waiting to sail from Aulis, to sacrifice his daughter Iphigenia to Diana, whom he had offended, is persuaded by Ulysses to do so, xii. 80; xiii. 181; captured the daughters of Ainius that with their miraculous power of turning what they touched to corn and wine they might feed his army, xiii. 655. See Atrides and Tantalides

Aganippe, a celebrated fountain of the Muses on Mount Helicon, v. 312

Agave, a daughter of Cadmus, mother of Pentheus; in a Bacchic frenzy she helped to tear her son to pieces, iii. 725 ff.

Agynor, son of Neptune, king of Phoenicia, father of Cadmus, iii. 51, 97; and of Europa, ii. 858

Agenore domus i.e. the home of Cadmus, iii. 308
INDEX

Agenorides, a descendant of Agenor; Cadmus, iii. 8, 81, 90; iv. 563; Perseus (whose connexion with Agenor, however, was very remote), iv. 772

Aglauros, daughter of Cecrops, ii. 560; envies her sister Herse because of Mercury’s love, ii. 740 ff.; punished by Minerva for her treachery, ii. 752 ff.; changed by Mercury into a stone, ii. 820

Ajax: (1) son of Telamon, xii. 624; xiii. 22, 123, 194, 231; grandson of Aeacus, xiii. 25; great-grandson of Jupiter, xiii. 28; one of the stoutest of the Greek warriors, xiii. 386; lord of the sevenfold shield, xiii. 2, 347; he prevented Hector from burning the Greek ships, xiii. 7; chosen by lot to fight duel with Hector, xiii. 82 ff., 275 ff.; saves Ulysses on the field of battle, xiii. 71 ff.; supports his claim against Ulysses for the armour of Achilles, xiii. 2 ff.; defeated in this contest, he goes into a frenzy of rage and kills himself with his own sword, xiii. 384 ff.; from his blood a flower springs up whose petals are marked with his name, Ajax. x. 207; xiii. 395. See Telamonius and Telamonlades. (2) The son of Oilens, xii. 622; styled Ajax moderate, “the Less,” xiii. 356; violated Cassandra and slain by Minerva with a thunderbolt of Jupiter, xiv. 468. See Narycius heros

Alastra, a Lycian, slain by Ulysses, xiii. 257

Albula, an ancient name for the Tiber, xiv. 328

Alexander, a Lyceian, slain by Ulysses, xiii. 258

Alcatho, son of Pelops, founder of the city of Megara; hence Megara is called urbs Alcathoii viii. 8; called also Alcathoë, vii. 443

Alcidamas, father of Ctesylla, vii. 369

Alcemon, a Tyrian sailor, companion of Aeetes, iii. 618

Alcides, a descendant of Alceus, father of Amphitryon, usually applied to Hercules, the reputed son of Amphitryon, ix. 13, 51, 110, 217; xi. 213; xii. 538. See Hercules

Alcios, king of the Phaeacians, who entertained Ulysses, xiv. 565

Alicthoë, daughter of Minyas, who with her sisters opposed the worship of Bacchus, iv. 1, 32 ff.; they were changed by Bacchus into bats, iv. 380 ff.

Alemaeon, son of Amphiarauts and Erephyle; killed his mother as directed by his father, ix. 408; pursued by the Furies, ix. 410; his first wife was Alphesiboea, daughter of Phegeus; he left her and married Callirhoë and was slain by the brothers of Alphecboea, ix. 412

Alemena, daughter of Electryon, king of Tiryns, wife of Amphitryon, mother of Hercules by Jupiter, ix. 23; called Tirynthia from her birth-place at Tiryns in Argolis, vi. 112; called also Argolis from her native land, ix. 276, 313; the mother-in-law of Deianira, viii. 544; relates her hard experience in the birth of Hercules, ix. 285 ff.

Aleo, a Boeotian, a famous engraver, xiii. 683

Alepyone, daughter of Aeolus, wife of Ceyx, xi. 384; entreats her husband not to take a sea journey, bids him farewell, and after his wreck is informed by Juno of this through a phantom-shape of Ceyx, xi. 415 ff.; she and her husband were changed into Halcyons, xii. 741

Almon, a Greek, father of Myscelos, the founder of Crotona in Lower Italy, xv. 19

Almonides, son of Almon, Myscelos, xv. 26, 48

Alexandroë, a nymph, daughter of the river-god Granicus, and mother by Priam of Aesacus, xi. 763

Almo, a small river flowing into the Tiber, xiv. 329

Alóidæ, putative sons of Alcaeus, Otus and Ephialtes, but in reality the offspring of Neptune by Iphimedia, the wife of Alcaeus, vi. 117

Alpes, the Alps mountains, vii. 226; xiv. 594

Alpheis, an epithet of Arethusa as the beloved of the river-god Alpheus, v. 487

Alphenor, one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 248

Alpheus, a river and river-god of Elia who loved Arethusa, ii. 250; v. 576, 599

Althaea, wife of Oeneus, king of Calydon, mother of Meleager; on hearing that her son has killed her two brothers, she halts between two feelings; decides against her son and burns the fatal billet on which his life depends, viii. 445 ff.

Amathus, a city in Cyprus sacred to Venus, x. 220, 227

Amazon, one of the Amazons, a race of warlike women who dwelt on the Thermus river; in particular, Hippolyte, the mother by Theseus of Hippolytus, xv. 552

Ambracia, a city in Epirus, xiii. 714

Ammon, (1) an Egyptian and Libyan deity in the form of a ram, identified by the Greeks and Romans with Zeus and Jupiter, iv. 671; v. 17, 328; xv. 309; (2) a friend of Perseus, slain by Phineus, v. 107

Amphiaraus, a Greek seer, one of the heroes (Oeclides) at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 317; son of Oeneus, father of Alcaeus, husband of Eriphyle, who betrayed him for a golden necklace; he rejoined on his son the duty of punishing Eriphyle, ix. 407

Amphimedon, a Libyan, follower of Phineus, v. 75

Amphion, son of Jupiter and Antiope, husband of Niobe; king of Thebes, whose walls he built by the magical music of his lyre, vi. 176 ff.; xv. 427; killed himself because of grief at the death of his sons, vi. 271, 402

Amphiassos, son of Apollo and Dryope, ix. 356

Amphitrite, daughter of Nereus, wife of Neptune, a sea-goddess; used by metonymy for the sea, i. 14

Amphitryon, son of Alcaeus, king of Thebes, husband of Alcmena and putative father of Hercules, vi. 112

Amphitrionidae, a name of Hercules as the supposed son of Amphitryon, ix. 140; xv. 49

Amphissa, unknown rocks in Lower Italy, xvi. 703

Amphrysus, a small river in Thessaly, i. 580; vii. 229

Ampycides, son of Ampyx, Mopsus, viii. 316; xii. 456, 524

Ampyus, a priest of Ceres, v. 110

Ampyx: (1) a follower of Perseus, v. 184; (2) one of the Laithae, xii. 450
INDEX

Amulius, younger son of the Alban king, Proca, usurped the kingdom from his elder brother, Numitor, but was dethroned by Numitor's grandsons, Romulus and Remus, xiv. 722

Amyclae, a town in Laconia, viii. 314; x. 162

Amyclides, epithet of Hyacinthus as the descendant of Amyclas, builder of Amyclae, x. 162

Amycus, a centaur. xii. 245

Amymone, a famous spring of Argos, ii. 240

Amyntor, a king of the Dolopians in Thessaly, xii. 364; father of Phoenix, viii. 807

Amythaon, father of Melampus, xv. 325

Anaphe, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 462

Anapis, a river and river-god of Sicily, beloved of Cyane, v. 417

Anaxarete, a beautiful maiden of Cyprus, who disdained the love of Iphis and was turned to stone, xiv. 699

Ancaeus, an Arcadian at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 315, 391, 401

Anchises, son of Capys, father of Aeneas by Venus, ix. 425; carried from burning Troy by Aeneas, xiii. 624; visits Anius at Delos, xiii. 640; visited by Aeneas in Hades, xiv. 118; his grave in Sicily, xiv. 84

Andraemon: (1) the father of Amphissus and husband of Dryope, who was changed into a lotus-tree, ix. 333, 363; (2) an Aetolian king, father of Thoas and a combatant before Troy, xiii. 357

Androgeos, son of Minos, king of Crete, treacherously killed at Athens after having overcome all his competitors in wrestling, vii. 458; viii. 58

Andromeda, daughter of Cepheus and Cassiope; chained to a rock and exposed to a sea-monster because of her mother's sin, saved by Perseus, iv. 670 ff.; married to Perseus, iv. 757

Andros, a son of Anius, ruler of one of the islands of the Cyclades named for him, vii. 469; xiii. 649, 665

Anemone, the "wind-flower" which sprang up from the blood of Adonis, x. 735

Anguis, the constellation of the Serpent, lying high in the north, ii. 138, 178; iii. 45; viii. 182

Anigrus, a little river in Elis, xv. 282

Anio, a river in Latium, xiv. 329

Anius, king and priest of Apollo on Delos, entertains Anchises and Aeneas. xiii. 632 ff.; to his daughters Bacchus had granted the power of turning objects at a touch to corn and wine and olives, xiii. 650 ff. See Andros

Antaeus, a Libyan giant slain by Hercules. ix. 184

Antandrus, a seaport in the Troad, xiii. 628

Antenor, one of the older Trojan chiefs who, with Pram, would have given Helen back at the demand of Ulysses, xiii. 201

Anthedon, a town in Boeotia, vii. 232; xiii. 9:65

Antigone, daughter of Laomedon, changed by Juno into a stork, vi. 93

Antimachus, a centaur, xii. 460

Antiope, called Nycteus as daughter of king Nycteus; mother by Jupiter of Amphion and Zethus, vi. 111
INDEX

Antiphates, king of the Laestrygonians, who sank Ulysses' ships and devoured one of his men, xiv. 233 ff.

Antissa, a town on Lesbos, xv. 28;

Antium, a town in Latium, xiv. 718

Antonius, the Roman leader who with Cleopatra fought the Romans under Octavius in the naval battle near Actium, xv. 826

Anubis, an Egyptian god represented with the head of a dog, ix. 690

Aonia, a district of Bocotia in which lies Mount Helicon, i. 313; iii. 339; v. 333; vi. 2; vii. 763; ix. 112; x. 589; xii. 24

Aonides, an epithet of the Muses because their favourite haunt, Mount Helicon, was in Aonia, an earlier name for Bocotia, v. 333; vi. 2

Aphareis proles, the offspring of Aphareus, a king of the Me-sentians, referring to his sons, Lyneus and Idas, viii. 304

Aphareus, a centaur, xii. 341

Aphidias, a centaur, xii. 317

Apidamus, a river in Thessaly, vii. 228

Apis, the sacred ox worshipped as a god by the Egyptians, ix. 691

Apollo, an epithet of Orpheus as the son of Apollo, xi. 8

Apollo, son of Jupiter, i. 517, and Latona; twin brother of Diana, vi. 205 ff.; born in the island of Delos, vi. 191; represented most frequently as Phoebus, the sungod, whose chariot is the shining disc of the sun, ii. 1 ff. et passim; the god of prophecy, i. 517; iii. 8, 130; ix. 332; xv. 632; god of the healing art, i. 521, 566; ii. 618; x. 189; god of music and especially of the lyre, i. 519; vi. 384; x. 108; xi. 155 ff.; god of the bow, x. 108; kills the Python and in honour of this feat establishes the Pythian games, i. 441 ff.; his various epithets are proles Letoïa, viii. 15; Latoiis, vi. 384; Latogena, vi. 160; Latoïs, xi. 196; Delius, i. 454; Delphicus, ii. 543, 677; Clarus, xi. 413; Paen, i. 566; xiv. 720; Smintheus, xii. 585; Phoebus, passim; deus arquitenens, i. 441; vi. 265; juvenis deus, "god of eternal youth," i. 531; Intionsus, xii. 585; and see iii. 421; xi. 165; lands sacred to him are Delos, Delphi, Claros, Tenodos, Patara, i. 516; his sacred tree the laurel, i. 553; xv. 634; his loves were Daphne, i. 452 ff.; Clymene, i. 751; Coronis, ii. 543; Leucothoë, iv. 196 ff.; Isse, vi. 122; Dryope, ix. 331; Calliope, xi. 8; Chione, xi. 303 ff.; Cassandra, xiii. 410; Cumaean Sibyl, xiv. 133; his boy loves were Hyacinthus, x. 162 ff., and Cyparissus, x. 106 ff.; his sons were Phaëthon by Clymene, i. 751; Aesculapius by Coronis, ii. 629; xv. 624; Amphissos by Dryope, ix. 356; Orpheus by Calliope, xi. 8; Philaemon by Chione, xi. 317; he promised Phaëthon any gift he might name as proof of his fatherhood, ii. 42 ff.; mourning Phaëthon's death and refuses to light the world for a whole day, ii. 329, 381 ff.; served as a shepherd in Elis, ii. 677; and with Admetus in Thessaly, vi. 122; discloses to Vulcan the shame of Mars and Venus, iv. 171 ff.; takes refuge from pursuit of giants in the form of a crow, v. 329; with his sister Diana destroys the children of Niobe at request of Latona, his mother,
INDEX

vi. 204 ff.; flays Marsyas, who challenged him to a contest in music, vi. 382 ff.; is challenged by Pan to a contest in music and wins over him, xi. 155 ff.; helped Neptune build the walls of Troy, xii. 587, while in xi. 205 it is Neptune alone who built them; helped also with the walls of Megara, viii. 16; changed Daedalion into a hawk, xi. 339; at Neptune's request directs the arrow of Paris against Achilles, xii. 598 ff.; xiii. 501; gave gift of augury to Andros, xii. 560

Appenninus, a range of mountains in Italy, ii. 226; xv. 432

Aquilo, the north wind, i. 262, 328; in plural, ii. 192; v. 285; x. 77; as a god, Boreas, his two sons were Zetes and Calais, vii. 3

Ara, the Altar, a southern constellation, ii. 139

Arachne, daughter of Idmon, a Lydian maiden wonderfully gifted in weaving, vi. 5 ff.; challenged Pallas to a contest in weaving, is defeated and changed by the goddess to a spider, vi. 52, 140

Arcadia, a country in the centre of the Peloponnesus, l. 689; ii. 405; ix. 192; xv. 382

Arcas, son of Jupiter and Callisto, ii. 468; unwittingly hunts the bear into which his mother has been changed by Juno, ii. 457; is set by Jupiter in the sky as the constellation of the Little Bear, ii. 506

Arcesius, son of Jupiter, father of Laërtes, grandfather of Ulysses, xiii. 144

Ares, the double constellation of the Great and Little Bears into which Juno changed Callisto and her son, and which Jupiter set in the heavens; by Juno's request Neptune was not to allow them to bathe (set) in his waters, ii. 132; iii. 45, 595; iv. 625; xiii. 293, 726

Areia, a city of the Rutuliens, from whose ashes sprang the bird of the same name, the heron, xiv. 580

Areopagus, Mars' Hill at Athens, confused with the Acropolis, vi. 70, note

Areos, a centaur, xii. 310

Arestorides, Argus, son of Arestor, i. 624

Aretusa, a nymph of Elis, attendant of Diana, loved by Alphans, v. 409; tells her story to Ceres, v. 572 ff.

Argo, the ship of the Argonauts, xv. 337

Argolica paelx, Io, i. 726; Phoronis, ii. 524

Argonauts, a band of heroes under Jason who sailed from Greece to Colchis in quest of the Golden Fleece, vii. 1; xiii. 24

Argos, the capital city of Argolis in the Peloponnesus, i. 601; ii. 240; vi. 414; xv. 164

Argus, son of Arestor, a monster with eyes all over his body, set by Juno to guard the Io-heifer, i. 624; slain by Mercury at Jupiter's order, i. 717; his eyes set by Juno in her peacock's tail, i. 723; ii. 533

Ariadne, daughter of Minos; in love with Theseus, she helps him escape the labyrinth, elopes with him, is deserted on the island of Dia, loved by Bacchus, who set her crown in the sky, viii. 172 ff.

Aricia, a town in Latium, xv. 488

Arne, betrayed her fatherland, the island of Siphnos, and was changed into a daw, vii. 464

Asbolus, a centaur with power of augury, xii. 308
INDEX

Ascalaphus, son of the Acheron and Orpheus, tattled on Proserpina and was changed by her into a screech-owl, v. 539 ft.

Ascanius, son of Aeneas, xiii. 627; xiv. 583; he built and ruled over Alba Longa as its first king, xiv. 609

Asia, v. 648; ix. 448; xiii. 484

Asopiades, an epithet of Aeacus as the grandson of the river-god Asopus, vii. 484

Asopis, an epithet of Aegina as the daughter of Asopus, vi. 113

Assaracus, a king of Phrygia, son of Tros, father of Capys and grandfather of Anchises, xi. 756

Assyrians, an Assyrian, v. 60; xv. 393

Asterie, daughter of Coeus, sister of Latona, wooed by Jupiter, vi. 108

Astraean, the goddess of justice, last of the celestials to abandon the earth on account of man's wickedness, i. 150

Astraean, a Titan, husband of Aurora and father of the winds; hence these are called Astraean brothers, xiv. 545

Astyages, a companion of Phineus, v. 205

Astyanax, son of Hector and Andromache, who after the fall of Troy was hurled by the Greeks from a lofty tower, xiii. 415

Astypaleus, belonging to the island of Astypalaea, one of the Sporades, vii. 462

Astypaleus, belonging to the island of Astypalaea, one of the Sporades, vii. 462

Atlantida: (1) a daughter of Iasos or Inasion of Arcadia, a participant in the Calydonian boar-hunt; beloved by Meleager, was first to wound the boar, and was presented by Meleager with the spoils; she is called Tegena, viii. 880, and Nonacria, viii. 426; (2) a daughter of King Sychoneus of Boeotia, famous for her beauty and swiftness of foot; was conquered in running by Hippomenes and married by him; her story, x. 560 ff.; was changed by the angry Cybele into a lioness, x. 689 ft.

Athamanitades, an epithet of Palaeamon as the former son of Athamas, xiii. 919

Athamas, son of Aeolus, iv. 487, 512; brother of Sisyphus, iv. 467; king of Boeotian Orchomenus, father of Phrixus and Helle, husband of Ino, the daughter of Cadmus, uncle of Pentheus, iii. 564; iv. 420; driven mad by the Furies at the instance of Juno, he pursued his wife and her little son, Melicerta, over a cliff, iv. 481 ff. See Aeolid

Atheneae, the city of Athens, v. 652; vi. 421; vii. 507, 723; viii. 262; xv. 430

Athys, an Indian youth, companion of Persens, v. 47, 63

Athos, a high mountain in Macedonia, ii. 217; xi. 554

Atlantiades, a descendant of Atlas, applied to Mercury, his grandson, i. 682; ii. 704, 834; viii. 627; and to Mercury's son, Hermaphroditus, iv. 368

Atlantis, Maia, the daughter of Atlas, ii. 685

Atlas, a mountain in Northern Africa, personified as a giant, the son of Iapetos, iv. 632; holds the sphere of heaven on his shoulders, ii. 296; vi. 175; father of the Pleiades, one of whom was Dione, mother of Nloe, vi. 174; another was Maia, mother of Mercury, i. 682; himself and his kingdom described, iv. 631 ff.; had been warned by Themis that a son of Jupiter would despoil him of his golden tree, iv. 643; refused hospitality to Perses and was changed into a rocky mountain by a sight of the Gorgonhead, iv. 657 ff.; conceived merely as a mountain, iv. 772; xv. 149
INDEX

Atracides, an epithet of Caeneus from his home town, Atrax, in Thessaly, xii. 209

Atreus, son of Pelops, king of Mycene, father of Agamemnon and Menelaus, xv. 855

Atrides, the son of Atreus, applied to the older, Agamemnon, xii. 623; xiii. 189, 230, 369, 365, 439, 656; to the younger, Menelaus, xii. 623; xv. 162, 805

Atticus, belonging to Attica, vii. 492

Attis, a beautiful young Phrygian shepherd, beloved by Cybele, who made him her priest; but, having broken his vow of chastity, he was driven insane by the goddess and in a fit of madness emasculated himself, x. 104

Augustus, a surname of Octavius Caesar after he became Emperor, pleased with the grief of his people at Julius Caesar's death, i. 204; a laurel-tree stood before the door of his palace, i. 562; his great glory as successor to Caesar's power is prophesied by Jupiter to Venus. xv. 807 ff.

Aulis, a Boeotian harbour where the Greek fleet assembled preparatory to sailing to Troy, xii. 10; xiii. 182

Aura, a breeze which Cephalus invoked to soothe his heat; Procris, his wife, hearing of his words and thinking that this was a woman's name, was led to her unfortunate death, vii. 813 ff.

Aurora, daughter of the Titan, Pallas, hence called Pallantia, ix. 421; xv. 191; and Pallantia, xv. 700; goddess of the morning; ii. 113; v. 440; wife of Tithonus, ix. 422; laments the death of her son Memnon, iii. 676 ff.; is inflamed with love for Cephalus and tries to win him from his wife Procris, vii. 703

Ausonia, a country in Lower Italy, used poetically for Italy. v. 350; xiii. 708; xiv. 7, 320, 772, 786; xv. 647

Auster, the south wind, i. 66; ii. 855; v. 285; vii. 532; viii. 3, 121; xi. 192; xii. 510; xiii. 725

Autolycoes, son of Mercury and Chione, father of Anticlea and grandfather of Ulysses, celebrated for his craftiness, xi. 313; he was the husband of Erysichthon's daughter, viii. 738

Autonoë, daughter of Cadmus, mother of Actaeon, iii. 198; aunt of Pentheus, whom she helps to tear in pieces, iii. 720

Autonoësus heros, Actaeon, son of Autonoë, iii. 198

Aventinus, a mythical Alban king, xiv. 620

Avernus, a name for the Lower World, iv. 487; v. 540; x. 51; xiv. 114; In plural, Averna, the entrance to the Lower World, xiv. 105

Babylonius, belonging to the city of Babylon, ii. 248; iv. 44, 99

Bacchiadæ, an ancient royal family of Corinth, descended from Bacchis, one of the Heraclidæ, the founder of Syracuse, v. 407

Bacchus, son of Jupiter and Semele, daughter of Cadmus, iii. 620; v. 329; snatched from his mother's dead body and sewed up in Jupiter's thigh, iii. 312; given to Ino as foster-mother, iii. 313; reared in a cave by the nymphs of Nysa, iii. 314; his worship enthusiastically received at Thebes, iii. 528; opposed by Pentheus, iii. 531 ff.; the story of his capture by Tyrrhenian sailors and of their fate told by Acoetes, iii. 582 ff.; brings destruction on Pentheus, iii. 701 ff.; and on Lycurgus, iv. 22; changes the daughters of Minyas into bats, iv. 391 ff.; took refuge from pursuit of Giants in the form of a goat, v. 329; his amour with Erigone, vi. 125; gains from Medea renewed youth for his nurses, vii. 295; loved Ariadne and set her crown in the sky, viii. 176; is the foster-son of Silemus, xi. 99; rewards Midas for his kindness to Silemus, xi. 100 ff.; punishes the Thracian women for the murder of Orpheus, xi. 67; gave to the daughters of Anius the power to change objects by touch to corn and wine, xiii. 650; his conquest of India, iv. 20, 605; xv. 413; his various epithets, iv. 11 ff. See Thyoneus (2)
INDEX

Bactrius, from the city of Bactra in Persia, v. 135

Baliaricus, from the Balearic Islands, between Spain and Africa, ii. 727; iv. 709

Battus, a rustic changed by Mercury into a touch-stone, ii. 683

Baucis, wife of Philemon, viii. 631 ff.

Belides, the fifty daughters of Danaïdis, granddaughters of Belus, king of Egypt, more frequently called Danaïdes; forced to marry their cousins, the fifty sons of Aegeus, they, with one exception, killed their husbands on their wedding-night, and for this suffered in Hades; their punishment was to fill a bottomless cistern with water carried in sieves, iv. 463; x. 44

Bellona, goddess of war, sister of Mars, v. 155

Belus, a primitive Asiatic king, founder of the Assyrian kingdom, iv. 213; not the ancestor of the Belides

Berecyntius heros, Midas, son of Cybele, so called from Berecyntius, a mountain in Phrygia, xi. 16, 106

Beroë, the old nurse of Semele, iii. 278

Bienor, a centaur, xii. 345

Bisaldis, Theophane, daughter of Bisaltes, loved by Neptune, vi. 117

Bistonius, belonging to the Bistonae, a people of Thrace, xiii. 430

Boebe, a town in Thessaly, vii. 231

Bocotia, a country in Middle Greece, ii. 239; xii. 9; mythical origin of the name, iii. 13

Bona Copia, goddess of abundance, ix. 88

Boötes, a northern constellation near the Bears, called also Arctophylax, ii. 176; viii. 206; x. 447

Boreas, the north wind, i. 65; personified as a god, his rough wooing of Orithya, vi. 682 ff.; father of Zetes and Calais, vi. 712. See Aquilo

Botres, son of Eumelus; while his father was sacrificing to Apollo he ate the brain of the sacrificial animal and for this his angry father smote him down with a firebrand; Apollo pitied the father's lamentations and changed the boy into a bird, the bee-eater, vii. 390

442
INDEX

Britanni, the inhabitants of the British Isles, xv. 752
Bromius, an epithet of Bacchus, iv. 11
Bromis, a centaur, xii. 459
Brotes, a twin brother of Ammon and with him slain by Phineus, v. 107; also the name of one of the Lapithae, xii. 202
Bubasis, from Bubasos, a town in Caria, ix. 644
Bubastis, a town in Egypt; also the goddess who was worshipped there, corresponding to Diana, ix. 691
Buris, a seaport town of Achaia, xv. 293
Busiris, a king of Egypt, who sacrificed strangers and was himself slain by Hercules, ix. 183 Butes, son of Pallas, companion of Cephalus on his embassy to Aegina, v. 500
Butrotes, a city in Epirus, XIII. 721
Byblis, daughter of Miletus, twin sister of Caunus, for whom she felt a hopeless passion, ix. 453 ff.; she was changed into a fountain, ix. 664
Cadmeis, Semele, the daughter of Cadmus, III. 287
Cadmus, son of the Phoenician king Agenor, III. 3, 51, 81; ordered by his father to find his sister Europa on pain of exile, III. 3; asks oracle of Phoebus as to a site for his new city, III. 9; follows sacred heifer, III. 17; kills serpent sacred to Mars, III. 32 ff.; is warned by a voice that he, too, shall become a serpent, III. 97; at Pallas' bidding he sows the serpent's teeth in the ground from which spring armed men, III. 104; marries Harmonia, daughter of Mars and Venus, III. 132; he and his wife are changed to serpents, iv. 563 ff.
Caeneus, a youth of Thessaly, called Atracides from Atrax, a city of that country, xii. 209; born a girl, changed to a youth and made invulnerable, VIII. 305; XII. 172; participated in the battle against the centaurs, was killed by them and changed into a bird, xii. 459 ff.
Caenis, daughter of Elatus of Thessaly, ravished by Neptune, who in requital and at her request changed her into a youth, Caeneus, and made her invulnerable, xii. 189 ff.
Caesar, Julius, his assassination, i. 201; his great deeds, his death, his deification at the behest of Venus, xv. 746 ff.
Calclus, a river in Mysia, II. 245; XII. 111; xv. 278
Caligula, the old nurse of Aeneas who died and was buried in the place in Italy called by her name, xiv. 157, 443 ff.; xv. 716
Calais, one of the winged sons of Boreas and Orthynthia, was one of the Argonauts, vi. 716; with his brother drove the Harpies away from Phineus, vii. 3
Calaura, an island on the coast of Argolis, xii. 384
Calchas, son of Thestor, a seer and priest who accompanied the Greeks to Troy; he interpreted the omen of the snake and birds at Aulis, xii. 19 ff.
Calliopé, mother of Orpheus, x. 148; one of the Muses who sang the song of Ceres and her wanderings in search of the stolen Proserpina, v. 339 ff. See Musae Callirhoë, daughter of Acheloüs, ix. 413; second wife of Alcmæon, ix. 411; gained from Jupiter immediate growth from infancy to manhood for her sons in order that they might avenge their father, ix. 432 Callisto, an Arcadian nymph, a favourite of Diana, ravished by Jupiter, ii. 409 ff.; driven by Diana from her train, ii. 464 ff.; changed by Juno into a bear, ii. 470 ff.; is hunted as a bear by her son, Arcas, ii. 497 ff.; is set by Jupiter in the sky as the constellation of the Great Bear, ii. 506; is forbidden by Oceanus at Juno's request to dip beneath his waves, ii. 528
INDEX

Calydon, an ancient city in Aetolia on the River Euenus, vi. 415; viii. 270, 324, 495, 525, 528, 727; ix. 2, 112, 147; xiv. 313; xv. 769
Calydonian Boar-Hunt, a famous hunt, at which assembled all the heroes of Greece; cause of the boar's coming, viii. 271 ff.; the muster of the heroes, viii. 300 ff.; the place of the hunt described, viii. 329 ff.; the hunt, viii. 338 ff.; the boar is first wounded by Atalanta, viii. 382; is killed by Meleager, viii. 414
Calymne, an Island in the Aegean Sea, viii. 222
Camene, ancient Italian nymphs with the gift of prophecy, later identified with the Muses, xiv. 434; xv. 482
Caneace. See Aelonia virgo
Canens, daughter of Janus and Venilia, and wife of Picus; grieving for his strange loss, she is changed to water, xiv. 333 ff.
Canopus, a city in Egypt, xv. 828
Capanace, an Argive chief, one of the seven against Thebes, struck with lightning by Jupiter, ix. 404
Capetus, one of the Alban kings, xiv. 613
Caphareus, a rocky promontory on the coast of Euboea, xiv. 472, 481
Caphys, an Alban king, xiv. 613
Capitolium, a hill in Rome on which stood a temple of Jupiter, i. 561; ii. 538; xv. 589, 828, 866
Capreae, an island in the Bay of Naples, xv. 709 Cares, the inhabitants of Caria in Asia Minor, iv. 297; ix. 645
Carpathians, from the island of Carpathos, in the Aegean Sea, xi. 249
Cartheius, from Carthea, a town on the island of Ceos, vii. 368; x. 109
Cassandra, daughter of Priam and Hecuba, gifted with prophecy by Apollo, captured and insulted by Ajax, son of Oileus, xiii. 410
Cassiope, wife of Cepheus, mother of Andromeda; by her foolish boasting of her beauty she offended the Nereids and brought punishment on the innocent Andromeda, iv. 670, 687, 738
Castalia, a famous spring on Mount Parnassus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, iii. 14
Castalians, belonging to the Castalian spring on Mount Parnasus, iii. 14
Castor, the son of Tyndarus and Leda, twin brother of Pollux; one of the heroes at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 301, 372. See Tyndaridae Castra Iuni, or Castrum, an ancient city of the Rutuli, xv. 727 Caucasus, a mountain range in Asia, ii. 224; v. 86; viii. 798.
Caunon, a city in Brutium, v. 705
Caunus, son of Miletus and Cyane, the daughter of the river-god Maeander, hence called Maendarius, ix. 574; was the twin
INDEX

rother of Bybils, who conceived a hopeless love for him, ix. 453 ff.; founded the city of Caunus in Caulia, ix. 634 Caystros, a river in Lydia famous for its many swans, ii. 255; v. 386
Cea, the same as Ceos, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 368; x. 120
Cebrenis, Hesperie, daughter of Cebren, a river-god of the Troad, xl. 769 Cecropides, an epithet of Theseus as a descendant of Cecrops, viii. 551; in plural, Cecropidac, the Athenians, vii. 486, 671
Cecrops, Aglauros, daughter of Cecrops, xi. 806; in plural, Cecropides, the daughters of Pandion, Procles and Phllomela, as Athenians, vi. 667
Cecropius = Athenian, applied to the citadel, vi. 70; xv. 427; the harbour, vi. 446; to Eumolpus, xl. 93
Cecrops, the mythical founder of Athens, vi. 446; xv. 427; his three daughters were Herse, Pandrosos, and Aglauros, xi. 555
Celadon: (1) an adversary of Persans, v. 144; (2) one of the Lapithae, xii. 250
Celitus, a priest of Cybele, changed by Jupiter into stone, iv. 282
Cenaens, an epiteth of Jupiter whom Hercules worshipped at Ceuæum, the north-western point of the island of Euboea, ix. 136, 164
Ceucleis, the wife of Cinyras, mother of Myrrha, x. 435
Centaurs, fabulous creatures living in the mountains of Thessaly, half man and half horse, hence called biformes, ix. 121; duplæx natura, xii. 504; semihominines, xii. 536; bimembres, xv. 283; they were sons of Ixion and of a cloud in the form of Juno, ix. 123; xii. 504; hence called Nubi-genae, xii. 211, 541; at the marriage of Pirithoüs and Hippodamia many centaurs were invited, and on account of an insult offered to the bride by Enytus, one of their number, there ensued the famous battle of the Centaurs and Lapithae, xii. 210 ff.; for famous individual centaurs, see Nessus and Chiron; two female centaurs are Hylonome, the beloved of Cyllarus, and Ocyrhone, daughter of Chiron
Cephalus, an Athenian prince, grandson of Aeolus, hence Aeolides, vi. 681; married Procris, daughter of Erectheus, king of Athens; comes to ask aid of Aeacus for Athens against Minos, vii. 493; tells the tragic story of Procris and of his magic javelin, vii. 675 ff.; beloved by Aurora but scorus her love, vii. 704 ff.
Cephenes, a name for the Ethlopts from their king, Cepheus, v. 1, 97
Cepheus, king of Ethlopts, husband of Casslope, brother of Phineus, father of Andromeda, iv. 669, 738; he vainly tries to repress his brother's rash attack upon Persans, v. 12 ff.
Cephisina, an epithet of Narcissus as the son of the river-god Cephisus, iii. 351
Cephisus, a river in Phoci, i. 369; iii. 19; a river-god of the stream, father, by the nymph Lirlope, of Narcissus, iii. 343; his grandson was changed by Apollo into a sea-calf, vii. 388
Ceramhus, a mythical character who in the time of Deucalion's flood escaped drowning by being miraculously changed into a beetle, vii. 353
INDEX

Cernstae, a horned people in Cyprus, changed by the angry Venus into bullocks, x. 222 ff.

Cerberus, the three-headed watchdog of Hades, iv. 450; his origin is either from Echidna, vii. 408; or from Medusa, x. 22; dragged forth from Hades by Hercules as his twelfth labour, vii. 409 ff.; ix. 185; flecks of foam falling from his mouth grew into the plant called aconite, vii. 418; sight of him turned a man into stone, x. 65

Cercopes, a people in Lydia changed by Jupiter into monkeys on account of their treacherous natures, xiv. 92

Cercyon, a king of Eleusin, who required all travellers to wrestle with him and slew them when overthrown; he was himself defeated and killed by Theseus, vii. 439

Ceres, the daughter of Saturn and Rhea, sister of Jupiter, v. 564; to whom she bore Proserpina, v. 515; goddess of agriculture, v. 341 ff.; sends Triptolemus in her dragon car to give grain-seed and teach agriculture to the world, v. 642 ff.; her long wanderings in search of her daughter, who had been stolen away by Pluto, v. 438 ff.; changes a boy who mocked at her into a lizard, v. 451; asks for and hears the story of Arethusa, v. 572 ff.; appeals to Jupiter for the restoration of her daughter to earth, v. 512 ff.; loved by Neptune in the form of a horse, vi. 118; sends Famine to torment Erysichthon because he cut down her sacred oak, viii. 741; desires immortality for her beloved Iasion, ix. 422; the festival of Ceres, x. 431

Ceyx, son of Lucifer, xi. 271, 346, 445; king of Trachis, on Oeta, xi. 383; husband of Aleyone, xi. 284; his death and change into a bird, xi. 411 ff.; grants asylum to Peleus, xi. 274

Chalciope, sister of Medea, whom Aectes had given in marriage to Phrixus, vii. 51

Chao mines, Chao mines, of Chaonia: (1) a country in Epirus, v. 163; x. 90; xiii. 117; (2) a city in Syria, v. 163

Chaos, the formless mass out of which the orderly universe was made, i. 7; ii. 299; the shapeless underworld, x. 30; xiv. 404

Charaxus, a Lapith, xii. 272

Chariclo, a water-nymph, mother by Chiron of Ocyroë, ii. 636

Charon, the ferryman who carries souls across the river of death in the underworld, x. 73

Charops, a Lycian, xiii. 260

Charybdis, a dangerous whirlpool between Italy and Sicily, opposite Scylla, vii. 63; viii. 121; xiii. 730; xiv. 75

Chersidamas, a Lycian, xiii. 259

Chimaera, a fabulous monster in Lycia which had the head of a lion, the middle of a goat, and the tail of a snake; it breathed forth fire, vi. 339; ix. 647

Chione, daughter of Daedalion; loved by Apollo and Mercury together, she bore twin sons, Philammon to Apollo and Autolycus to Mercury; daring to slight Diana's beauty, she was shot through the tongue by the goddess, xi. 301 ff.
INDEX

Chiron, a celebrated centaur, son of Saturn and Philyra, ii. 676; vi. 126; Apollo entrusted to him the rearing of his son Aesculapius, ii. 630; his fate was foretold to him by his prophetic daughter, Ocyrhoe, ii. 649

Chius, of the island of Chios on the coast of Ionia, iii. 597

Chromis: (1) a companion of Phineus, v. 103; (2) a centaur, xii. 333

Chromius, a Lycian, xiii. 257

Chryse, a coast city of the Troad, xiii. 174

Chthonius, a centaur, xii. 441

Cicones, a people of Thrace, vi. 710; x. 2; xv. 513; the Ciconian women in a frenzy attack Orpheus and tear him in pieces, xi. 3 ff.; Bacchus in punishment changes them to trees, x. 67

Cilix, of Cilicia in Asia Minor, ii. 217

Cilla, a city of the Troad, xiii. 174

Cimmerians, a fabulous people supposed to have dwelt in caves in perpetual darkness, xi. 592

Cimolus, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 463

Cynphys, of the River Cynyps in Africa, v. 124; vii. 272; xv. 755

Cinyras, an Assyrian king, whose daughter, on account of her presumption, Juno changed to the steps of her temple, vi. 98; also a Cyprian king, son of Pygmalion, father of Myrrha and by her of Adonis, x. 299 ff.; Adonis is thence called Cinyreius, x. 712, 730

Cipus, a fabled Roman praetor upon whose head horns sprang forth, xv. 565 ff.

Circe, daughter of Titan and Perse, a sea-nymph, famed for beauty and for magic arts, whose haunt was an island called Aeaca, in the region of the promontory of Circei in Latium, iv. 205; xiii. 968; xiv. 10, 376, 382; she bewitched the followers of Ulysses, xiv. 247 ff.; offered her love to Glauceus, was repulsed, and in revenge brought horrible disfigurement upon his beloved Scylla, xiv. 10 ff.; loved Picus, but, being repulsed by him, changed him into a woodpecker, xiv. 346 ff.

Ciris, the name of the bird into which Scylla, the daughter of Nisos, was changed, viii. 151

Cithaeron, a mountain in Boeotia, ii. 223; iii. 702

Clania: (1) a companion of Phineus, v. 140; (2) a centaur, xii. 379

Clarius, an epithet of Apollo from Claros, a city in Ionia, where was a temple and oracle to the god, i. 516

Claros, a city in Ionia, i. 516; xi. 413

Cleonae, a town in Argolis, vi. 417

Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, mistress of Antonius, xv. 826

Clitorius, of the town of Clitor in Arcadia, xv. 322

Clymene, daughter of Oceannus and Tethys, ii. 156; wife of the Ethiopian king Merops, i. 763; beloved by Phoebus, iv. 204; mother by him of Phaethon, i. 758; mourns the death of Phaëthon, ii. 333

Clymeneius, an epithet of Phaethon from his mother Clymene, ii. 19

Clymenus, a companion of Phineus, v. 98

Clytaemnestra, the wife of Agamemnon, tricked into giving up her daughter Iphigenia for sacrifice at Aulis by a lie of Ulysses, who represented that she was to be married to Achilles, xiii. 193
INDEX

Clytie, one of the daughters of Oceanus, enamoured of Phoebus, iv. 206; jealous of the god’s love for Leucothoë, she tells the story to the girl’s father, iv. 236; pines away and is changed into a heliotrope, iv. 268

Clytius, a companion of Phineus, v. 140

Clytus: (1) a companion of Phineus, v. 87; (2) a son of Pallas, an Athenian prince, vii. 500

Cnidos, a city in Caria, x. 531

Coae matres, the women of Cos, who were angry because Hercules drove the captured cattle of Geryon through their fields; they reviled Juno, and were changed by her into cows, vii. 368

Cocalus, a mythical king in Sicily who received Daedalus under his protection after his flight from Crete, viii. 261

Cocintius, of the promontory of Cocintius in Bruttium, xv. 704

Coeranus, a Lycian, xiii. 257

Coetus, a Titan, the father of Latona, vi. 185, 366

Colchis, Colchus, of Colchis, a country in Asia, east of the Black Sea, vii. 120, 296, 301, 394; xiii. 24; an epithet of Medea, a native of this land, vii. 296, 301

Colophonius, from Colophon, a city in Asia Minor, vi. 8

Combs, daughter of Ophius, mother of the Aetolian Curetes; in the midst of flight from the persecution of her sons was changed into a bird, vii. 383

Cometes, one of the Lapithae, xii. 284

Cometes, a city on the Isthmus, v. 407; vi. 116; xv. 507

Corinna, a king of Phocis, father of Corone, who was changed to a crow, ii. 569

Coronis, two youths who sprang from the ashes of the daughters of Orion, xiii. 698

Coronides, an epithet of Aesculapius as the son of Coronis and Apollo, xv. 624

Coronis, daughter of Phlegyas of Larissa, hence called Larissaeus, ii. 542; beloved by Apollo, who, however, slew her because of jealousy, ii. 542, 599; he saved their child, the unborn Aesculapius, from his dead mother’s body, ii. 629

Corycides, nymphs who dwelt in the Corycian cave on Mount Parnassus, i. 320

Corythus: (1) a warrior from Marmarica, v. 126; (2) son of Paris and Oenone, vii. 361; (3) one of the Lapithae, xii. 290

Colis, from the island of Cos, vii. 363

Cragos, a mountain in Lydia, ix. 646

Cranter, the armour-bearer of Peleus, slain by the centaur Demoleon, xii. 361

Crataeis, a nymph, the mother of Scylla, xiii. 749

Creneaeus, a centaur, xii. 313

Cressa, a Cretan woman, Telethusa, ix. 703

Crete, the island of Crete, vii. 434, 481; viii. 99, 118; ix. 666, 755; xiii. 706; xv. 540, 541

Crimee, a town in Lucania, xv. 52

Crocale, a nymph in the train of Diana, iii. 169

Croesus, a youth who pined away with hopeless love of the nymph Smilax, and changed into a crocus-flower; Smilax also changed into a flower, iv. 283

Cromyon, a village near Corinth, vii. 435

Croton, a mythical hero who had entertained Hercules at his home in Italy; Hercules promised that ages hence a city should be founded on that spot and be named from his host; the city was Crotona, xv. 16 ff.
INDEX

Crow, oue, a beautiful princess, daughter of Coronous; pursued by Neptune, she was changed to a bird by her goddess Minerva, but lost favour because of her unwelcome tattling, ii. 569 ff.

Ctesylla, daughter of Alcidamas, changed into a dove, vii. 369

Cumae, an ancient Euboean colony on the sea-coast of Campania, xiv. 104, 121, 135; xv. 712

Cumaeia, an epithet of the Sibyl of Cumae, who guided Aeneas through the underworld; she tells to him the story of Apollo’s wooing, xiv. 121, 135; she had a temple at Cumae, xv. 712

Cupido, or Amor, the god of Love, son of Venus, i. 463; represented as a young boy armed with bow and arrows, i. 456, 468; iv. 321; v. 366; ix. 543; x. 311; he caused Apollo to be inflamed with love for Daphne, i. 453 ff.; and Pluto for Proserpina, v. 380 ff.

Curea, the chief city of the Sabines in ancient times, xiv. 778; xv. 7

Curetes, the mythical origin of, iv. 282

Curetis, of Crete, viii. 153

Cyane, a fountain-nymph of Sicily whose waters flow into the River Anapis near Syracuse, v. 409; she was changed into water by Pluto because she strove to stop his abduction of Proserpina, v. 423 ff.

Cyaneae, two small rocky islands at the entrance of the Euxine Sea, which according to fable clashed together whenever any object attempted to pass between them, vii. 62. See Symplegades

Cyane, a nymph, daughter of Maeander, mother by Miletus of Caunus and Byblis, ix. 452

Cybele, mother of the gods, x. 104, 686; xiv. 536; turret-crowned, x. 696; her favourite seats were Mounts Ida and Bercyntus, xi. 16; xiv. 534; is drawn in a chariot with yoked lions, x. 704; xiv. 538; in wrath at the desecration of her temple, she changes Hippomenes and Atalanta into lions, x. 696 ff.; rescues from fire the ships of Aeneas which had been built of her sacred pines on Ida, and changes them into water-nymphs, xiv. 535 ff.

Cyclades, a circle of islands in the Aegean Sea, ii. 264

Cyclopes, a fabulous race of giants on the coast of Sicily, having one eye and that in the centre of the forehead; they forged the thunderbolts of Jupiter, i. 259; iii. 305; xiv. 2; xv. 93; one in particular, Polyphemus, called Cyclops, in love with Galatea, xiii. 744 ff.; his murderous attack on Ulysses and his crew, xiv. 174, 249. See Polyphemus

Cycnus: (1) son of Sthenelus, grieving for the death of his relative Phaethon, changed to a swan, ii. 367 ff., 377; xii. 581; (2) son of Apollo and Hyrie, a great hunter, who in a fit of anger leaped off a cliff, but in mid-air was changed by Apollo into a swan; hence Tempe is called Cycneia, vii. 371; (3) the invulnerable son of Neptune, met Achilles and was finally strangled by him; changed by Neptune into a swan, xii. 72

Cydonaeus, from Cydonia, a town in Crete, viii. 22
INDEX

Cyllarus, a centaur beloved by Hylonom, xii. 393 ff.

Cyllene, a mountain in Arcadia, the birthplace of Mercury, i. 217, 713; ii. 720, 818; v. 176, 831, 607; vii. 386; xi. 304; xiii. 146; xiv. 291

Cyllenus, an epithet of Mercury from Mount Cyllene, i. 718; ii. 720, 818; xiii. 146; xiv. 291

Cymelus, one of the Lapithae, xii. 454

Cynthia, an epithet of Diana from Cynthus, a mountain in Delos, her birthplace, ii. 465; vii. 755; xv. 537

Cynthia, a mountain on Delos, sacred to Apollo and Diana, ii. 221, 465; vi. 204; vii. 755; xv. 637

Cyprissus, a youth who was loved by Apollo, and at his death changed by the god into a cypress-tree, x. 106 ff.

Cyprus, an island on the coast of Asia Minor, sacred to Venus, x. 270, 645, 718; xiv. 696

Cytherea, Cythereias, Cythereis, Cythereous, of or belonging to the island of Cythera in the Aegean Sea, an epithet of Venus, who is said to have sprung from the sea-foam near the island, iv. 190, 288; x. 529, 640, 717; xiii. 625; xiv. 487, 584; xv. 886, 803

Cythereous heroes, applied to Aeneas as the son of Venus, xiii. 625; xiv. 584

Cythus, an island of the Cyclades, v. 252; vii. 464

Cytoriacus, from Cytorias, a mountain in Paphiaingonia abounding in boxwood, iv. 311; vi. 132

DAEDALION, a son of Lucifer, brother of Ceyx, father of Chione; crazed by his daughter's death at the hands of Diana, he is changed by Apollo into a hawk, xi. 295 ff.

Daedalus, a mythical Athenian architect, built labyrinth for the confinement of the Minotaur at the command of Minos, viii. 155; himself confined in Crete, he makes wings for himself and his son and so escapes, viii. 183 ff.; envies his nephew, Perdix, and pushes him off a cliff, viii. 240; finds refuge after his flight with king Cocalis in Sicily, viii. 261; quoted as type of resourceful man in time of trouble, ix. 742

Damasichthon, one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 254

Danaë, daughter of Acrisius and mother of Perseus by Jupiter, who came to her in the form of a golden shower, iv. 611; vi. 113; xi. 117

Danaëus heroes, Perseus, son of Danaë, v. 1

Daphne, daughter of the river-god Penus, hence called Peneis, i. 472, 504; the first love of Phoebus Apollo, i. 452 ff.; changed to a laurel-tree, which the god adopts as his sacred tree, i. 548 ff.

Daphnis, a shepherd boy of Ida, iv. 277

Dardanidae matres, Dardanian, i.e. Trojan women, xiii. 412

Dardanians, an epithet applied to the descendants of Dardanus, the son of Jupiter and Electra, who came from Italy to the Troad, and was one of the ancestors of the royal line of Troy; = Trojan; to Hellenus, xiii. 335; to Iulus, xv. 767; to Rome as founded by one of the Trojan race, xv. 431

Daulis, a city in Phocis, v. 276
INDEX

Daunus, an ancient king of Apulia, xiv. 458, 510
Deianira, daughter of Oeneus, king of Calydon, hence called Calydonis, ix. 112; sister of Meleager, ix. 149; wooed by Achelois and Hercules, won by Hercules, insulted by Nessus, who in turn is slain by Hercules, ix. 9 ff.; sends tunic anointed with the poisoned blood of Nessus to Hercules in order to win back his love from Iole, ix. 138 ff.; one of the sisters of Meleager not turned into a bird, viii. 544
Deionides, son of Delone, Miletus, ix. 443
Delphobus, son of Priam, after Hector's death one of the greatest heroes among the Trojans, xii. 547
Delia, an epitaph of Diana from Delos, her birthplace, v. 639
Delius, an epitaph of Apollo, i. 454; v. 329; vi. 250; xi. 174; xii. 598
Delos, an island of the Cyclades, sacred to Apollo and Diana as their birthplace, i. 454; v. 329, 639; vi. 191, 250, 333; viii. 221; xi. 174; xii. 598; xiii. 631; xv. 337
Delphi, a famous city in Phocis where was the oracle of Apollo, i. 379, 515; ii. 543, 677; ix. 332; x. 168; xi. 304, 414; xv. 144, 631
Delphius, an epitaph of Apollo from his oracle at Delphi, ii. 543, 677
Demoleon, a centaur, xii. 356, 368
Deois, a daughter of Deo, a name of Ceres, Proserpina, vi. 114
Deoïna, belonging to Ceres, her oaktrees, viii. 758
Dercetis, a Syrian goddess mother of the Babylonian Semiramis, iv. 45
Deucalion, son of Prometheus; he with his wife, Pyrrha, were the only human pair saved from the flood, i. 318 ff.; vii. 356; repeople the world by throwing stones over their shoulders, i. 395
Dia, an old name for Naxos, iii. 690; viii. 174
Diana, daughter of Jupiter and Latona, twin sister of Apollo, v. 330; xv. 550; born on Delos; represented on earth as goddess of the hunt, iii. 163; armed with darts, bow and quiver, iii. 252; v. 375; swift of foot, iv. 304; with robes girt high, i. 695; ii. 245; iii. 156; ix. 89; in heaven as the moon-goddess, xv. 196; see Luna and Pheobe; in the underworld identified with Hecate or Trivia, because worshipped where three roads meet, ii. 416; she is ever virgin, i. 487, 695; v. 375; xii. 28; expels Callisto from her train, ii. 441 ff.; changes Actaeon into a stag, ii. 185 ff.; took refuge in the form of a cat from the pursuit of the Giants, v. 330; with Apollo destroys the children of Niobe, vi. 204 ff.; enraged at the slight of Oeneus, king of Calydon, sends huge bear to ravage his country, viii. 272; angered by the presumption of Chione, shoots the girl with an arrow through the tongue, xi. 321; angered because Agamemnon had killed her favourite stag, or had boasted over her of his skill in hunting, she stays the Greek fleet at Aulis until they should sacrifice Iphigenia to her, xii. 27 ff., 185; at the last moment substitutes a hind on the altar for the girl, and bears her away to be her priestess at Tauris in Scythia, xii. 34; Orestes, rescued from death at Tauris by her aid, brings her image away to Aricia in Latium, hence she is called Orestea, xv. 489; changes Hippolytus’ appearance beyond recognition after his restoration to life and brings him to Italy, xv. 537 ff.; in pity of her woe for her husband’s death, changes Egeria into a spring of water, xv. 550; her epithets are Latonia, l. 696; Ortygia, l. 694; Cynthia, ii. 465; Titaia, ii. 173; Della, v. 639; Dictynna, ii. 441; Scythia, xiv. 331; Orestea, xv. 489

Dictaeus, from Mount Dictae in Crete, = Cretan, iii. 2. 223; ix. 717; an epithet of Minos, viii. 43

Dictyna, “goddess of the net,” an epithet of Britomartis in Crete, identified with Diana, ii. 441

Dictys: (1) a sailor with Acoetes, iii. 615; (2) a centaur, xi. 334

Dido, a Phoenician, queen of Carthage, who killed herself out of hopeless love for Aeneas, xiv. 80. See Sidonia

Didyme, two small islands near Syrus in the Aegean, vii. 469

Dindyma, a mountain in Mysia, sacred to Ceres, ii. 223

Diomedes: (1) son of Tydus, king of Argos, one of the bravest of the Greek heroes at Troy, the frequent companion of the undertakings of Ulysses, xiii. 68, 100, 239, 242; wounded Venus while she was attempting to shield Aeneas, xiv. 477; xv. 769, 806; after the Trojan war he settled in Italy at Arpi and married the daughter of Daunus, king of Apulia, xiv. 510; received the messenger of Turnus who came to ask aid against Aeneas, and told the story of his adventures, xiv. 457 ff.; his epithets are Tydides, as son of Tydeus, xii. 622; xiii. 68; Oenidcs, as grandson of Oenoe, king of Calydon in Aetolia, xiv. 512; Aetolian heroes, xiv. 461; hence his territory in Italy is called Calydonian regna, xiv. 512; (2) a barbarous king of Thrace, killed by Hercules, ix. 194

Dirce, a famous spring near Thebes in Boeotia, ii. 239

Dis, a name for Pluto (which does not appear in the Metamorphoses), king of the underworld, iv. 438, 444, 511; v. 356, 508; x. 16; he gained his kingdom by lot, v. 368; the son of Saturn, v. 420; brother of Jupiter and Neptune, v. 528; through the craft of Venus he falls in love with Proserpina and carries her off to the lower world, v. 359 ff.; x. 28; his kingdom described, iv. 432 ff.; x. 15 ff.

Dodona, a city in Epirus where was an oracle of Jupiter, the oldest in Greece, whose responses were delivered by the rustling of the sacred oaks, vii. 623; xiii. 716. See Chaonian oaks

Dodonaea, Dodonis, of Dodona, vii. 623; xiii. 716

Dolon, a Phrygian spy out on a night adventure, slain by Ulysses, xiii. 98, 244

Dolopes, a people in Thessaly, xi. 364

Doris, daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, wife of Nereus, mother of the Nereids, ii. 11, 269; mother of Galatea, xii. 742

Dorylas: (1) a friend of Perseus, v. 129; (2) a centaur, xii. 380

Dryades, wood-nymphe, iii. 507;
is changed to a mere voice, III. 399

Edonides, the women of the Edoni, a Thracian people who murdered Orpheus, and were changed by Bacchus into trees, XI. 69 ff.

Eetion, king of Thebes in Mycia, father of Andromache, XII. 110

Egeria, an Italian nymph, instructress and wife of Numæ, XV. 482; at Numæ's death she refused to be comforted, XV. 487 ff.; and finally dissolved away into a spring of water, XV. 547

Elatus, a prince of the Lapithæ, father of Caenis, XIII. 189, 497

Elefæus, a name for Bacchus from the wild cry of the Bacchantes, IV. 15

Eleusin, a city in Attica, famous for the worship of Ceres, VII. 439

Elis, a country and city in the western part of the Peloponnesus, II. 679; v. 487, 576, 608; IX. 187; XII. 550; XIV. 325

Elpenor, a comrade of Ulysses, XIV. 252

Elymus, a centaur, XII. 460

Elysiæum, the home of the blessed spirits in the underworld, XIV. 111

Elysiæus, of Elysium, the abode of the blessed in the underworld, XIV. 111

Emathides, the daughters of Pierus, king of Emathia in Macedonia, who insulted the Muses and were changed to magpies, v. 669

Emathion, an old man killed in the fight between Phineus and Persæus, v. 100

Emathius, from Emathia, a district of Macedonia, v. 313; XII. 462; XV. 824

Enaesimus, son of Hippocædn, 453
INDEX

killed at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 362 Enipeus, a river in Thessaly, i. 579; vi. 116; vii. 229; also the river-god who was the lover of Tyro, daughter of Sal-moneus; in the form of Enipeus Neptune tricked Tyro; according to another story Neptune with Iphimedes, the wife of Aloeus, begot the giant Otus and Ephialtes, called Aloidæ from Aloeus; Ovid has mixed these two stories in vi. 117
Ennomus, a Lycean, xiii. 260
Envy, her home described, ii. 760 ff.; sent to punish Aglauros, ii. 785
Epaphus, son of Jupiter and Io, grandson of Inachus, worshipped as a god in Egypt along with his mother, i. 748
Ephyre, an ancient name for Corinth, ii. 240; vii. 391
Epidaurus, from Epidaurus, a city of Argolis, sacred to Aescu-lapius, iii. 278; vii. 436; xv. 643, 723
Epimethia, Pyrrha, the daughter of Epimetheus, the brother of Prometheus, i. 390
Epirus, a country in the north of Greece, viii. 283; xiii. 720
Epopeus, one of the sailors of Acoetes, iii. 619
Epytus, one of the Alban kings, xiv. 613
Erasisus, a river in Argolis, xv. 276
Erebus, a name for the underworld, v. 443; x. 76; xiv. 404
Erechtheus, king of Athens, son of Pandion, father of Orthynthia and Procris, vi. 677, 701; vii. 697 Erichthonius, a son of Vulcan, born without mother, ii. 553, 757; ix. 424

Eridana, the mythical name of the River I'ô, ii. 324, 365
Erigdupua, a centaur, xii. 453
Erigone, daughter of Icarius, loved by Bacchus, vi. 125; she hanged herself through grief at her father’s tragic death, and was set in the heavens as the constellation Virgo, x. 451
Erinnys, a Fury, or goddess of vengeance; the Furies were three sisters Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megaera, daughters of Uranus and Night, iv. 452; viii. 481; x. 314; called euphemistically Eumenides; with snaky hair and torches in hand they pursue the guilty, ix. 410; x. 314, 349; they are wild, horrible, baleful, implacable, mad, i. 241, 725; iv. 452, 481, 490; xi. 14; at the request of Juno they drive Athamas mad, iv. 470 ff.; were present at the wedding of Tercus and Procou, vi. 429
Eriphyle, wife of Amphiaræus, whom she betrayed to Polyneices, and was slain by her own son Alcmaeon, ix. 407
Erycina, an epithet of Venus from Eryx, a mountain in Sicily sacred to her, v. 363
Erymanthus: (1) a river in Arcadia, ii. 244; (2) a mountain in Arcadia, ii. 499; v. 608
Erysichthon, son of the Thessalian king Triopas, committed sacrilege against Ceres by cutting down her sacred tree, and was punished by unappeasable hunger, viii. 738 ff.
Eryx, son of Actor, companion of Phineus, v. 79
Eryx: (1) a mountain in Sicily sacred to Venus, ii. 221; v. 363; (2) a son of Venus, hence brother of Aeneas, xiv. 83; (3) an opponent of Persens petrified by the Gorgon-head, v. 198
INDEX

Eteocles, son of Oedipus and Iocasta, brother of Polyneices; their death prophesied, ix. 405
Ethemon, an opponent of Perseus, v. 163
Etruscus, of Etruria, a country of Central Italy, xv. 558
Euagrus, one of the Lapithae, xii. 290
Euander, son of Carmentis, emigrated from Pallantium in Arcadia before the Trojan war and founded the city of Pallantium in Latium; gave aid to Aeneas against Turnus, xiv. 456
Euboea, a large island east of Central Greece, ix. 218, 226; xiii. 182, 660, 905; xiv. 4, 155
Eucnus, a river of Aetolia near Calydon, viii. 527; ix. 104
Enhan, a name of Bacchus from the cry of his worshippers, iv. 15
Euippe, wife of Pierus, mother of the Pierides, v. 303
Ennelus, father of Botres, vii. 390
Eumenides, "the kind goddesses," a euphemistic name of the Furies, vi. 430; viii. 482; ix. 410; x. 46
Eumolpus, a mythical singer of Thrace, priest of Ceres, brought the Eleusinian mysteries to Attica, xi. 93
Eupalamus, one of the heroes at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 360
Euphorbus, son of Panthoë, a brave Trojan killed by Menelaus; Pythagoras claimed to be Euphorbus reincarnate, xv. 161
Euphrates, a river of Syria, ii. 248
Europa, daughter of the Phocian king Agenor, betrayed by Jupiter in the form of a bull, ii. 858; vi. 104; her son was Minos, viii. 23, 120
Eurotas, a river in Laconia, ii. 247; x. 169
Eurus, the east wind, i. 61; ii. 160; vii. 639; viii. 2; xi. 481; xv. 603
Eurydice, wife of Orpheus, x. 31, 48; xi. 63, 66
Eurylochus, a companion of Ulysses, xiv. 252, 287
Eurymidas, Telemus, son of Eury- mus, xiii. 770
Eurynome, mother of Leucothoe, iv. 210, 219
Eurynomus, a centaur, xii. 310
Eurypylus: (1) a king of Cos, slain by Hercules, vii. 363; (2) a Thessalian hero at Troy, one of the nine who offered themselves for a duel with Hector, xiii. 357
Eurystheus, king of Mycenae, son of Sthenelus, ix. 273; by a trick of Juno he was given mastery over Hercules, and imposed upon him the famous twelve labours, ix. 203, 274
Eurytides, Hippasus, son of Eurytus (3), one of the heroes at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 371
Eurytion, present at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 311
Eurytis, Iole, daughter of Eurytus (1), ix. 395
Eurytus: (1) king of Oechalia, father of Iole and Dryope, ix. 356; (2) the centaur who precipitated the strife between the centaurs and Lapithae at the wedding of Pirithoüs and Hippodamia, xii. 220; (3) the father of Hippasus, viii. 371
Exadius, one of the Lapithae, xii. 266
Fama, Rumour, personified, ix. 137; xii. 48 ff.
Fames, Famine, a hag, personification of hunger, sent by Ceres to torment Erysichthon, viii. 784 ff.
Farfarus, a small tributary of the Tiber, xiv. 330

455
INDEX

Faunigena, Latinus, son of Faunus, xiv. 449
Faunus: (1) an ancient king of Latium, father of Acis, xiii. 750; of Latinus, xiv. 449; (2) a sylvan deity of flocks and fields, identified with the Greek Pan, vi. 329; (3) in plural, demi-gods generally ranked with satyrs, i. 193; vi. 392

Galanthis, a faithful handmaid of Alcmena, changed by Juno into a weasel, ix. 306
Galatea, a sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus and Doris, tells story of her love for Acis, and the Cyclops’ wooing of her, xiii. 738 ff.
Gallicus, from Gaul, i. 533
Ganges, a river in India, ii. 249; iv. 21; vi. 636
Ganymedes, son of Tros, brother of Ilus and Assaracus; on account of his great beauty Ganymedes was loved by Jupiter, who sent his eagle to steal him away, x. 155; xi. 756
Gargaphie, a vale and spring in Boeotia, sacred to Diana, where she was surprised by Actaeon, iii. 156
Geryon, a three-bodied monster killed by Hercules, ix. 184
Gigantes, monstrous sons of Earth and Tartarus, with numerous arms and serpent feet, fabled to have made war upon the gods, scaling heaven by piling mountains one on another; they were overthrown by Jupiter’s thunderbolts and buried under Sicily, i. 152, 157, 183; v. 319; x. 150; xiv. 1, 184 Glauceus, a fisherman of Anthedon in Boeotia, is changed into a sea-divinity by his chance eating of a magic herb, vii. 233; falls in love with Scylla, xiii. 906 ff.; appeals to Circe in aid of his suit to Scylla, and is himself loved by Circe, xiv. 9 ff.
Gnosticus, Gnosius, from Gnosos, a city in Crete, = Cretan, iii. 208; vii. 474; viii. 40, 52, 144; ix. 669
Golden Age, described, i. 89 ff.
Gorgo, daughter of Oeneus, king of Calydon, sister of Melenager, viii. 543 Gorgon, Medusa, best known of three Gorgons, daughters of Phorcys, iv. 743; she had snaky hair, iv. 615, 698, 771, 792; v. 241; a look at her face turned the observer to stone, iv. 655, 781; v. 180 ff., 249; Medusa’s head cut off by Perseus, iv. 615, 770; from her blood sprang Perses and Chrysaor, iv. 786; vi. 120; drops of blood falling on the sands of Libya change them to snakes, iv. 618; Atlas changed into a mountain at sight of the Gorgon-head, iv. 655 ff.; its touch changes seaweed to coral, iv. 744; why Medusa only of her sisters has snaky hair, iv. 791; Perseus uses the petrifying head as a last resort against Phineus and his band, v. 180 ff.; the head is finally set by Minerva in her aegis, iv. 803
Gortynaicus, from the city of Gortyn in Crete, = Cretan, vii. 778 Gradivus, an epithet of Mars, vi. 427; xiv. 820; xv. 863
Graecia, Greece, xiii. 199
Graio, Grecian, iv. 16, 538; vii. 214; xii. 64, 609; xiii. 241, 281, 402, 414; xiv. 163, 220, 525; xv. 9
Graucus, a river and river-god of Asia Minor, father of Alexiropoulos Graulce, the Graces, young and beautiful sisters, daughters of Jupiter and Eurynome, attendants of Venus; used collectively, Gratia, vi. 429
INDEX

Gyarus, a centaur, xii. 260, 628

Gyrus, an island of the Cyclades, v. 252; vii. 470

Hades, the underworld of spirits, kingdom of Dis, described, iv. 432 ff.

Haemonia, an old name for Thessaly, i. 568; ii. 81, 543, 599; v. 806; vii. 132, 159, 314; viii. 813; xi. 409, 652; xii. 81, 213

Haemonius, Thessalian, from Haemonia, an old name of Thessaly; an epithet of Jason, vii. 132; of Achilles, xii. 81

Haemus, a mountain in Thrace, ii. 219; x. 77

Haemus, once a man, changed into a mountain in punishment of his impious presumption, vi. 87

Halcyoneus, a companion of Phineus, v. 135

Halesus, one of the Lapithae, xii. 462

Hamadryas, a wood-nymph, i. 690; xiv. 624

Hammon, see Ammon

Harmonia, daughter of Mars and Venus, wife of Cadmus, iii. 132; she and her husband were changed into snakes, iv. 571 ff.

Harpocrates, the Egyptian god of silence, represented with his finger on his mouth, ix. 692

Hebe, daughter of Juno, born without father, ix. 400, 416; given to Hercules as wife after his translation to heaven, ix. 401; restored Ioalys to youth, ix. 400; called stepdaughter and daughter-in-law of Jupiter, ix. 416

Hebrus, a river in Thrace, ii. 257

Hecate, daughter of Perses and Asterie, sister of Latona, vii. 74, 174, 241; xiv. 406; often identified with Diana and Luna, and hence pictured as having three forms or three heads, vii. 94, 194; goddess of enchantments, vi. 139; vii. 194; xiv. 44

Hector, son of Priam and Hecuba, xi. 758; xii. 3; bravest hero among the Trojans, kills Proteus, the first to fall among the Greeks, xii. 68; attempts to burn the Greek ships, xiii. 7; demands a champion from among the Greeks to fight him, xiii. 82 ff.; fights duel with Ajax, xiii. 85, 275; fights with Achilles and is slain by him, xii. 77; xiii. 178; his dead body dragged around the walls of Troy, xii. 591; Priam ransoms his son's body with gold, xiii. 473

Hecuba, daughter of Dymas, xi. 761; xiii. 620; wife of Priam, xiii. 404; mother of Hector, xiii. 486; in the division of the Trojan captives she fell to the lot of Ulysses, xiii. 486; her farewell to Troy, xiii. 423; her lament over the death of Polyxena, xiii. 494 ff.; finds Polydorus' dead body on the shore in Thrace, xiii. 536; takes terrible vengeance on Polynestor, his murderer, xiii. 549 ff.; is changed to a dog, xiii. 406, 567 ff.

Helena, daughter of Leda and Jupiter (Tyndareus, the husband of Leda, was her putative father, xv. 233); wife of Menelaus, stolen by Paris, and thus the cause of the Trojan war, xii. 5; xiii. 200; quoted as type of famous beauty, xiv. 669; while still a maiden she had been captured by Theseus, but recovered by her brothers and brought back to Sparta, xv. 233; in her old age mourns the loss of her beauty, xv. 232

457
Hellenus, a son of Priam having the gift of augury, captured along with the Palladium by Ulysses and Diomede, xiii. 99, 335; after the fall of Troy is set by Pyrrhus over Epirus, where he entertains and advises Aeneas as to his future course, xiii. 723; xv. 458

Helia des, daughters of the Sun-god and Clymene, mourn the death of their brother Phaëthon; changed into poplars and their tears into amber, ii. 340 ff.; x. 91, 263

Helice, a name for the constellation of the Great Bear, viii. 207

Helices, a companion of Phineus, v. 87.

Helicon, a mountain in Boeotia, celebrated as the favourite haunt of the Muses, ii. 219; v. 254, 663; by metonymy for the art of music and poetry, viii. 534

Helle, daughter of Athamas and Nephele, sister of Phrixus; fleeing with her brother on the gold-fleeced ram, she fell off and was drowned in the Hellespont, which bears her name, x. 195

Hellespontus, the narrow strait which joins the Propontis with the Aegean Sea, xiii. 407

Helops, a centaur, xii. 334

Hennaeus, belonging to Henna, a town in Sicily, v. 385

Hercules, the most famous of the Greek heroes, son of Jupiter, ix. 104, 246 ff.; xv. 12; and of Alcmena, the wife of Amphitryon, ix. 23; as reputed son of Amphitryon, he is frequently called Alcides, from Alcens, father of Amphitryon, see Alcides; and Amphitryoniades, ix. 140; called also Tirynthius from Tiryns, in Argolis, his home town, see Tirynthius; on the day when he was to be born Jupiter announced that a descendant of Perseus was about to be born who should hold sway over all other descendants of that hero; Juno induced him to confirm this with an oath; she then, as godless of birth, withheld the birth of Hercules, who, through Alcmena, was great-grandson of Perseus, and hastened the birth of Eurystheus, grandson of Perseus, and by this trick the mighty Hercules was made subject to the weakling Eurystheus, ix. 281 ff.; Eurystheus was born in Mycene and Hercules in Thebes, hence the latter is called Aonius, ix. 112; at Juno's instigation Eurystheus set Hercules twelve great labours, ix. 22, 199; xv. 39; these labours are rehearsed in ix. 182 ff.; they are, in order of performance: (1) the killing of the Nemean lion, ix. 197; (2) the destruction of the Lernean hydra, ix. 69, 192, 193; (3) the capture alive of the stag famous for its speed and golden horns, ix. 188; (4) the bringing alive to Eurystheus of the Erymanthian boar, ix. 192; (5) the cleansing of the stables of Auges, king of Elis, ix. 187; (6) the killing of the carnivorous birds near the Stymphallian lake in Arcadia, ix. 187; (7) the capture alive of the wild Cretan bull, ix. 186; (8) the capture of the mares of Dionydes which fed on human flesh, ix. 194; (9) the securing of the girdle of Hippolyte, queen of the Amazons, ix. 189; (10) the killing of Geryon and the capture of his oxen, ix. 184; (11) the securing of the apples of the Hesperides, ix. 190; (12) the bringing to the upper world of the dog Cerberus from Hades, vii. 410; ix. 185; in addition to these set labours, Hercules killed Busiris, ix. 183; Antaeus, ix. 184; fought the centaurs, ix. 191; xii. 541; bore the heavens on his shoulders in Atlas' place, ix. 198; visited Croton in Italy, and prophesied the founding of Crotona, xv. 12; rescued Hesione, daughter of Laomedon, from the sea-monster, and being cheated of his promised reward, with the aid of Telamon captured Troy and dethroned Laomedon, xi. 213 ff.; xiii. 23; came to Cos, where he killed Enyppylos, vii. 364; fought with Aichellos for Delanira and overcame him, vii. 13 ff.; killed the centaur, Nessus, who insulted his bride, ix. 101 ff.; destroyed Messene and Elissa and Pylos, and slew all the twelve sons of Neleus except Nestor, xii. 549 ff.; fought against Eurytus, king of Oechalia, laid waste his kingdom, and took his daughter Iole captive, ix. 136 ff.; received the poisoned tunic from Delanira, sent by her in the belief that this, soaked in the blood of Nessus, would restore her husband's love to her; his great sufferings described, ix. 159 ff.; he built a pyre on Mount Oeta, and was burned alive thereon, ix. 299 ff.; his immortal part was deified by his father Jupiter, and set in the heavens as a constellation, ix. 271; after his translation to heaven he received Hebe as his wife, ix. 401; he gave his bow and arrows to Philoctetes as a reward for setting fire to his funeral-pyre, and in Philoctetes' hands these weapons were destined once again to war against Troy, ix. 231 ff.; xiii. 52, 401
INDEX

Hermaphroditus, the son of Mercury and Venus, story of, iv. 288

Hesione, a daughter of Cecrops, ii. 559; beloved by Mercury, ii. 724 ff.

Hersilia, the wife of Romulus; after his death she was reunited to her deified husband by Iris, and received the name of Hora, xiv. 830, 848

Hesperides, "the western maidens," three nymphs who on an island beyond Mount Atlas watched a garden with golden apples, iv. 637; xi. 114; these apples, though guarded by a sleepless dragon, were secured by Hercules, ix. 190

Hesperide, a nymph, daughter of the river-god Cebren, beloved by Aesacus, killed by the bite of a serpent, xi. 769

Hesperus, the evening star, v. 441

Hiberus, Hiberian or Spanish, vii. 324; a geographical epithet applied to the three-formed Geryon, whom Hercules slew, and whose cattle that hero drove away, ix. 184; xv. 12

Hippasus: (1) son of Eurytus, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 313, 371; (2) a centaur, xii. 352

Hippocoon, king of Amyclae, sent a part of his many sons, one of whom was Euaesimus, to the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 314, 363

Hippocrene, a famous spring on Mount Helicon, sacred to the Muses; said to have burst forth under the stroke of the hoof of Pegasus, v. 256 Hippodamias, father of Perimele, viii. 593
Hippodame or Hippodamia, daughter of Adrastus, wife of Pirithoës; at her wedding the centaur Eurytus attempted violence upon her, and so precipitated the great battle of the centaurs and Lapithae, xii. 210 ff.; quoted as a famous beauty, xiv. 670
Hippolyte, queen of the Amazons; Hercules conquered her and took from her her famous golden girdle, ix. 189; she was married by Theseus, to whom she bore Hippolytus, xv. 552
Hippolytus, son of Theseus and the Amazon Hippolyte, xv. 552; in his attempt to comfort Egeria he tells the story of his own sufferings and death, xv. 492 ff.; restored to life by Aesculapius, wholly changed in appearance, and placed in Italy by Diana, xv. 533 ff.; here he was known by the name of Virbius, xv. 544
Hippomenes, son of Megareus, a youth who conquered Atalanta in a race and married her, x. 575 ff.; changed by the angry Cybèle into a lion, x. 689 ff.
Hippotades, a name of Aeolus as son of Hippotes, iv. 663; xi. 431; xiv. 86; xv. 707. See Aeolus Hippothoës, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 307
Hister, the Lower Danube, ii. 249
Hodites: (1) an Ethiopian in the court of Cepheus, v. 97; (2) a centaur, xii. 457
Hora: (1) the name given to Hersilia after her deification and reunion with Romulus, xiv. 851; (2) in plural, the Hours, attendants of the Sun-god, ii. 26, 118

Hyacinthia, a festival celebrated at Amycles, in honour of Hyacinthus, x. 219

Hyacinthus, a beautiful Spartan youth, son of Amyclas, king of Amycles, hence he is called Amyclides, x. 162; called also Oebalides, as a general name for Spartan, from Oebalus, king of Sparta, x. 196; and see xiii. 396; he was beloved by Apollo and accidentally killed by the god in a game of quoits, x. 162 ff.; from his blood a flower sprang up whose petals bore the marks of Apollo's grief, AIAI, x. 217; xiii. 396

Hyades, daughters of Atlas, sisters of the Pleiades, a cluster of seven stars in the head of the Bull; their setting brings wet and stormy weather, iii. 595; xiii. 293; Dione, mother of Niobe, was one of the Hyades, vi. 174

Hyale, a nymph in the train of Diana, iii. 171

Hyantein, Boeotian, applied to Aganippe, v. 312; to Iolaiis, viii. 310

Hyatlius, the same as the above, applied to Actaeon, iii. 147

Hyles, a centaur, xii. 378

Hyleus, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 312

Hyleis, from Hyle, a little town in Boeotia, xiii. 684

Hyllus, son of Hercules and Deianira, who after his father's death married Iole, ix. 279

Hylonome, a female centaur, beloved by Cyllarus, xii. 405

Hymen or Hymenaeus, the god of marriage, present at the marriage of Perseus and Andromeda, iv. 758; he did not bless the marriage of Tereus and Procne, vi. 429; at the marriage of Iphis and Iantie, ix. 762 ff.; Orpheus
INDEX

and Eurydice, x. 2; the Hymenaeum, or nuptial song, at the marriage of Pirithoüs and Hippodamia, xi. 215

Hymettus, a mountain in Attica, vii. 702; x. 284

Hypaea, a little town in Lydia, vi. 13; xi. 152

Hypanis, a river of Sarmatia, xv. 285

Hyperboreiûs, Hyperborean, belonging to the extreme north, xv. 356

Hyperlon: (1) a Titan, son of Coelus and Terra, father of the Sun-god, iv. 192; (2) the Sun-god himself; Heliopolis, in Egypt, the city of Hyperion, xv. 406, 407

Hypseus, a companion of Phineus, v. 99

Hypsipyle, daughter of Thoas, king of Lemnos; at the time of the Argonauts she saved her father alone when the women killed all the men of the island, xiii. 399

Hyric, a lake and town near it in Boeotia; named from the mother of Cycnus (?) by Apollo; thinking that her son had perished, she melted away in tears and was changed to the pool that bears her name, vii. 371, 380

Iacchus, a name for Bacchus from the shouts of his worshippers, iv. 15

Ialysius, from Ialysos, a city in Rhodes, vii. 365

Ianthe, daughter of Cretan Teuestes, a beautiful girl betrothed to Iphïs, ix. 715 ff.

Iapetionides, Atlas, son of Iapetus, iv. 632

Iapetus, a Titan, father of Atlas, Prometheus, and Epimetheus, i. 82; iv. 632

Iapygia, the country in the heel of Italy, xv. 703

Iapyx, a son of Daedalus, who ruled in Apulia, in Southern Italy, xv. 52; hence Daunus, an ancient king of Apulia, is called Iapygian, xiv. 458, 510

Iasion, a son of Jupiter and Elektra, beloved by Ceres, ix. 423

Iason, son of Aeson, vii. 60, 77, 156, 164; viii. 411; Aeson’s brother, Pelas, usurped the throne of Iolchus in Thessaly, and sent Jason off on the adventure of the Golden Fleece; in the Argo, which he built by the aid of Minerva (called the first ship, vi. 721; viii. 302), he assembled the heroes of Greece and sailed in quest of the Fleece; the story of the adventure is told in vii. 1 ff.; Jason was also present at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 302, 343, 411. See Pagasaeus

Icarus: (1) son of Daedalus; attempting to fly on wings made by his father, he went too near the sun, lost his wings, and fell into the sea, called after him the Icarian Sea, viii. 195 ff.; (2) Icarus, or Icarins, the father of Ergone and Penelope, placed in the heavens as the constellation of Boëtes, x. 450

Icelos, a dream-god, son of Somnus, xi. 640

Ida, a mountain near Troy, ii. 218; iv. 277, 289, 293; vii. 359; x. 71; xi. 762; xii. 521; xiii. 324; xiv. 535

Idalia, an epithet of Venus from her sacred mountain, Idalium, in Cyprus, xiv. 694

Idas: (1) son of Aphaereus, king of Messene, took part in Calydonian boar-hunt, proles Aphaearia, viii. 304; (2) a courtier of Cepheus, slain by Phineus, v. 90; (3) a companion of Diomede, changed by Venus into a bird, xiv. 504 Idmon, of Colophon, father of Arachne, vi. 8
INDEX

Idomeneus, a king of Crete, leader of the Cretans against Troy, xiii. 358
Ilades: (1) an epithet of Gany-medes, = Trojan, x. 160; (2) an epithet of Romulus, as the son of Ilia, xiv. 781, 824
Ilion, Ilium or Troy, vi. 95; xiii. 408, 505; xiv. 467
Ilionesus, one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 261 Ilithyia, the Greek goddess of child-birth, corresponding to the Roman Lucina, ix. 283. See Lucina Illyricus, of Illyria, a country on the Adriatic Sea, north of Epirus, iv. 568
Ilus, son of Tros, builder of Ilium, xi. 756
Imbreus, a centaur, xii. 310
Inachides, a male descendant of Inachus: (1) Epaphus, his grandson, i. 753; (2) Persesus, merely as an offspring of an Argive royal line, iv. 720
Inachis, the daughter of Inachus, Io, i. 611; Isis, the Egyptian goddess, the divine manifestation of Io, ix. 687
Inachus, a river and river-god in Argolis, i. 583, 611, 640, 687, 753
Inarime, an island off the coast of Campania, xiv. 89
Indiges, the name under which the deified Aeneas was worshipped, xiv. 608
Indigetes, deified heroes, worshipped as the patron deities of their country, xv. 862
Indus, of India, i. 778; v. 47; viii. 288; xi. 167
Ino, daughter of Cadmus, wife of Athamas, sister of Semele, foster-mother of Baccus, iii. 313; helps to tear in pieces her nephew, Pentheus, iii. 722; makes unseemly boast of the power of her foster-son, Baccus, iv. 417; is pursued by Athamas, who was driven mad by Juno, and leaps with her son, Melicerta, from a cliff into the sea, but is changed by Neptune into the sea-goddess Lencothoë, iv. 519 ff.

Io, daughter of Inachus, i. 611; called Argolica paelx, from her father's country of Argolis, i. 726; loved and ravished by Jupiter, i. 588 ff.; changed by him into a heifer to avoid detection by Juno, i. 611; guarded by Argus, i. 624 ff.; driven over the world by a gadfly sent by Juno, i. 725 ff.; comes at last to the banks of the Nile and there regains her human form, i. 728 ff.; bears a son Epaphus, i. 748; is worshipped in Egypt as Isis, i. 747 Ioläüs, the son of Iphicles, nephew and companion of Hercules, restored to youth by Hebe, viii. 310; ix. 399, 430. See Hyantes Ioleiaus, of Iolcos, a seaport town of Thessaly, whence the Argonauts sailed, vii. 158
Iole, daughter of Eurytus, king of Oechalia, captured by Hercules, ix. 140; after the death of Hercules, at his command she was given as wife to his son, Hyllus, ix. 279
Ionium (seanor, mare), the Ionian Sea, lying west of Greece, iv. 535; xv. 50, 700 Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon, king of Mycenae, hence she is called Mycenis, xii. 34; sacrificed by her father to Diana at Aulis; but Diana is said to have substituted a hind at the last moment, and to have carried off the maiden to be her priestess at Tauris, xii. 28 ff.; xiii. 184

Iphinoüs, a centaur, xii. 379

Iphis: (1) born the daughter of one Ligdus, a Cretan, and afterwards by the grace of Isis changed into a young man, ix. 668 ff.; (2) a humble youth of Cyprus who indulged a hopeless love for Anaxarete, and hanged himself at her door, xiv 699 ff.

Iphitides, son of Iphitus, Coerusus, xiii. 257

Iris, goddess of the rainbow, xi. 590. 632; daughter of Thanatus, hence Thaumantias, iv. 480; special messenger of Juno, i. 271; xiv. 85; sent by Juno to Somnus, xi. 585 ff.; sent to burn the ships of Aeneas in Sicily, xiv. 85; sent to unite Hersilia to her dead husband, Romulus, xiv. 839

Iron Age, described, i. 127 ff.

Isis, an Egyptian goddess, believed by Greek mythology to have been the deified Io, 1. 747; hence called Inachis, ix. 687; promises aid to Telethusa, ix. 687; fulfils her promise by changing Iphis, born a girl, into a boy, ix. 773 ff.; her train described, ix. 687 ff.

Ismarius, from Ismarus, a mountain in Thrace, = Thracian, ii. 257; ix. 642; x. 305; xiii. 530

Ismenides, Theban women, so called from the neighbouring river, Ismenus, iii. 733; iv. 51; vi. 159; certain Theban women, changed by the wrath of Juno into birds, iv. 543 ff.

Ismenis, daughter of the Boeotian river-god Ismenus, the nymph Crocale, iii. 169

Ismenus, one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 224

Ismenus, a river in Boeotia near Thebes, ii. 214; iii. 169, 733

IV. 31, 562; vi. 159; xiii. 682

Ise, daughter of Macareus (1), vi. 124

Isthmus, the Isthmus of Corinth, vi. 419; vii. 405

Italia, Italy, xiv. 17; xv. 8, 59, 291, 701

Ithaca, an island in the I onian Sea, the home of Ulysses, xiii. 98, 103, 512, 711

Ithacus, a name for Ulysses as king of Ithaca, xiii. 98, 103

Itys, son of Tereus and Proce, vi. 437; slain by his mother and her sister, and served up at a banquet to his father, vi. 620 ff.

Iuba, a king of Numibia, xv. 755

Iulus, Ascanius, the son of Aeneas, from whom the gens Iulia claimed its origin, xiv. 583; xv. 647, 767

Juno, daughter of Saturn (see Saturnia) and Rhea; foster-daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, ii. 527; sister and wife of Jupiter and queen of the gods, l. 620; ii. 466. 512; iii. 263, 265, 284; vi. 94, 332; xiv. 829; goddess of marriage, vi. 428; ix. 762, 796; xi. 578; goddess of childbirth, see Lucina; her daughter was Hebe, ix. 400; her son, Vulcan, iv. 173; see also Mars; Iris is her messenger, see Iris; her bird is the peacock, in whose tail she set the eyes of the slain Argus, l. 722; xv. 385; her activities are most often employed in punishing her mortal rivals in the love of her husband; so she works her jealous rage on Io, l. 601 ff.; on Callisto, ii. 466 ff.; on Semele, iii. 261 ff.; punishes Ino through the madness of Athamas, iv. 421 ff.; changes the Theban women, friends of Ino, into stones, iv. 543 ff.; persecutes Latona, vi. 532 ff.; sends pestilence on Aegina, because named from her rival, vii. 523 ff.; stays the birth of Hercules, whom she hates for Alemena's sake, and by this trick makes him subject to Eurythemen, ix. 21, 176, 284, 295 ff.; punishes Echo for her treachery in shielding Jupiter, iii. 362 ff.; strikes Tiresias with blindness for siding with Jupiter against her, iii. 359; being tricked by Galanthia, she changes her into a weasel, ix. 306; changes the queen of the Pygmies into a crane and Antigone into a stork, both for daring to contend against her, vi. 90 ff.; takes refuge from the pursuit of the Giants in the form of a white cow, v. 830; Incensed that Jupiter should take Ganymede to be his cup-bearer, x. 161; takes pity on Alcyone and reveals to her husband's death, xi. 583 ff.; is hostile to Aeneas and to the Trojans, but at last gives up her enmity, xiv. 582; sends Iris to reunite Hersilia to her dead husband, Romulus, xiv. 829; Proserpina is called Juno Averna, "the Juno of the Lower World," xiv. 114
INDEX

Junoigena, Vulcan, the son of Juno, iv. 173

Jupiter, the son of Saturn and Rhea (see Saturninus); born in Crete and watched over in his infancy by the priests of Ida, iv. 282; viii. 99; with his two brothers, Neptune and Pluto, de-thrones Saturn, and in the division of the kingdom by lot the dominion of the heavens falls to him, who thus became the highest of the gods, i. 114, 154, 197, 251, 328; ii. 60, 280, 292; xiv. 807; xv. 858; he is subject only to the decrees of fate, i. 256; v. 532; ix. 434; xv. 807; his emblems of power are the sceptre, i. 178; ii. 847; and the thunderbolt, i. 154, 170, 197; ii. 61, 848; xiii. 51; his sacred bird is the eagle, which bears his thunderbolts in its talons, iv. 714; x. 158; xv. 386; his sacred tree is the oak, i. 106, and see Chononia and Dodona; he is the god and guardian of hospitality, x. 224; his name is used by metonymy for the heavens and the upper air, ii. 877; iv. 260; xiii. 707; his wife, who is also his sister, is Juno, and his sons by her are Vulcan and Mars; his children by other deities are Minerva, born without mother from the head of Jupiter (see Minerva); Mercury, by Maia, i. 669; Proserpina, by Ceres, v. 515; vi. 114; the nine Muses, by Mnemosyne, vi. 114; Venus, by Dionysus, xiv. 585; his amours with nymphs or mortal women and his sons by these are: with Io, Epaphus, i. 588 ff.; Latona, Apollo and Diana, i. 517, 696; vi. 336; Callisto, Ares, ii. 422 ff.; Europa, Minos, ii. 846 ff.; vi. 103; viii. 122, and Rhadamanthus, ix. 436; Semele, Bacchus, iii. 260 ff.; Danae, Persens, iv. 611, 697; Malia, the Palici, v. 406; Leda, Castor and Pollux, vi. 109; Antiope, Amphion and Zethus, vi. 111; Aegina, Aeacus, vi. 113; vii. 615; xiii. 28; Alemena, Hercules, ix. 28; Eurydica, Arcesius, xiii. 145; his age was the Silver Age of the world, i. 113 ff.; leaves heaven to investigate the sins of men i. 212 ff.; decides to destroy the human race by flood, i. 253 ff.; hurl a thunderbolt at Phaethon and stopa universal conflagration, II. 304; apologizes to Phoebus for this act, II. 396; disputes with Juno and refers the dispute to Tiresias, III. 320 ff.; changes Memnon on his funeral pyre into a bird, III. 586; changes Cemnus into a stone, IV. 282; flees to Egypt from the pursuit of the Giants, and hides in the form of a ram; is hence worshipped as the Libyan Ammon, with ram's horns on his head, v. 327; is entertained by Philemon and Banceis, VIII. 626 ff.; reveals the fates to Venus, how under Augustus Rome is to come to her highest glory, XV. 807 ff.; his temple on the Capitol at Rome, XV. 866
INDEX

Ixion, king of the Lapithae, father of Pirithous, VIII. 403, 613; XII. 210; for attempting violence upon Juno he was punished in the underworld, bound to a whirling wheel, IV. 461; IX. 124; X. 42; with a cloud-form which Jupiter made in the image of Juno he begot the centaurs, XII. 504; see Nubigenae

Lacedaemonius, of Lacedaemon, or Sparta, XV. 50

Lacinus, of Lacinium, a promontory in Italy near Crotona, XV. 13, 701

Laconis, Laconian, Lacedaemonian, III. 223

Ladon, a river in Arcadia, I. 702

Laertes, son of Arceius, father of Ulysses, XII. 625; XIII. 144

Laertiades, Ulysses, the son of Laertes, XIII. 48

Laertius hero, Ulysses, XIII. 124

Laestrygones, an ancient people of Italy in Campania, fabled to have been cannibals, XIV. 233

Laideia, Oedipus, the son of Laïus, solved the riddle of the sphinx, VII. 759

Lampetides, a musician in the court of Cepheus, v. 111

Lampetoe, one of the Heliades, II. 349

Lamus, a mythical king of the Laestrygones, the founder of Formiae, XIV. 233

Laomedon, king of Troy, father of Priam, Hesione, and Antigone, VI. 96; XI. 196, 757; cheats Apollo and Neptune out of their promised reward for building the walls of Troy, XI. 200 ff.

Lapithae, an ancient people in South-western Thessaly; their great fight with the centaurs, XII. 210 ff., 536; XIV. 670

Larissaeus, of Larissa, a city in Thessaly, II. 542

Latialis, Latinus, of Latium, Latian, Latin, generally=Roman, II. 366; XIV. 610, 623; XV. 481

Latinus: (1) son of Fannus, king of Laurentum in Latium, father of Laviula, hospitably receives Aeneas, XIV. 449; (2) one of the Alban kings, XIV. 611

Latium, a country in Central Italy in which Rome was situated, XIV. 452, 832

Latius, Latinus, Latin, generally=Roman, I. 560; XIV. 326, 390, 422, 832; XV. 486, 582, 626, 742

Lateis, Diana, the daughter of Latona, VIII. 273

Latois, Apollo, the son of Latona, XI. 196

Latona, daughter of Coeus, a Titan, VI. 185, 346, 366; mother by Jupiter of Apollo and Diana, VI. 160, 315, 336; refused by Juno a place on earth where she might bear her children, she gave them birth on the floating island of Delos, vi. 185 ff., 332; is insulted by Niobe and appeals to her two children for vengeance, vi. 204 ff.; story of her persecution by Lydian rustics, whom she changed into frogs, vi. 339 ff.; the sacred trees in Delos under which she bore her children, vi. 335; xiii. 635

Latonia, an epithet of Disna as daughter of Latona, i. 696; viii. 394, 542

Latonigenae, the twin children of Latona, vi. 160

Latous, belonging to Latona, her altar, vi. 274; her son Apollo, vi. 384

Latrenus, a centaur, xii. 463

Laurenos, of Laurentium, an ancient city of Latium, seat of King Latinus, xiv. 336, 342, 598

Lavinia, the daughter of Latinus, for whom Turnus fought against Aeneas, xiv. 570

Lavinium, a city of Latium, founded by Aeneas, xv. 728

Leachus, son of Athamas and Ino, slain by his father in a fit of madness, iv. 516

Lebinthus, one of the Sporadic Islands, viii. 222

Leda, daughter of Thesius, wife of the Spartan king, Tyndareus; Jupiter came to her in the form of a swan, and had by her two sons, Castor and Pollux, vi. 109

Leleges, a Pelasgic people scattered widely over parts of Greece and Asia Minor, vii. 443; viii. 6; ix. 645, 652

Lelex, one of the heroes at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 312; visits Achelous in the company of Theseus, viii. 567; tells the story of Philemon and Baucis, viii. 617

Lemnicola, Vulcan, whose favourite dwelling-place was Lemnos, ii. 757

Lemulus, Vulcan, iv. 185; Lemnos itself is called Vulcania, xiii. 313

Lemnos, an island in the Aegean Sea, the favourite seat of Vulcan, ii. 275; iv. 185; xiii. 46, 315

Lemnon, an epithet of Bacchus as god of the wine-press, iv. 14; xi. 132

Lerna, a marsh in Argolis, where the Hydra lived, i. 597; ix. 69, 74, 130, 192

Lesbos, an island in the Aegean Sea, one of whose chief cities was Methymna, ii. 591; xi. 55; xiii. 173

Lethaea, the wife of Olenus, who on account of her pride was turned into a stone, x. 70

Lethe, a river in the Lower World, a draught of whose waters brought forgetfulness, vii. 152; xi. 603

Leitois, belonging to Leto, the Greek form of Latona, applied to Calaurea, an island off the coast of Argolis, sacred to Leto, vii. 384

Letoës, an epithet of Apollo as the son of Leto, viii. 15

Leucas, an island off the coast of Acarnania, xv. 289

Leucippus, one of the heroes at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 306

Leucconoë, one of the daughters of Minyas, iv. 168

Leucosia, a small island near Paestum, xv. 708

Leucothoë: (1) the name of the sea-goddess into whom Ino was changed, iv. 542; (2) daughter of Orcharamus, king of Babylon, beloved by Phoebus, iv. 196; buried alive by her father, iv. 240; changed by her lover into a shrub of frankincense, iv. 255
INDEX

Liber, an old Italian god who presided over planting and fructification; afterwards identified with the Greek Bacchus, III. 520, 528; IV. 17; VI. 125; VII. 295; VIII. 177; XI. 105; XIII. 650

Libya, Africa, II. 237; IV. 617; V. 76, 328; XIV. 77

Libys: (1) African, applied to Ammon, v. 328; (2) one of the companions of Acoetes, III. 617, 676

Lichas, a servant of Hercules who brought to him from Delanira the poisoned tuinc, ix. 155; he was hurled by Hercules over the brink of a cliff, ix. 211; and was changed into a rock in mid-air, ix. 219

Ligdus, a Cretan, father of Iphis, IX. 670

Ligures, a people of Northern Italy, II. 370

Lilybaeon, a promontory on the southern coast of Sicily, v. 351; XIII. 726

Lilumae, a nymph of the Ganges, daughter of the god of that river, mother of Athia, v. 48

Lipyre, a city in Lycia, IX. 646

Liriope, a water-nymph, mother of Narcissus, III. 342

Litorum, a city in Campania, XV. 714

Lotis, a nymph, daughter of Neptune; fleeing from Priapus, she was changed into a lotus-tree, IX. 347

Lucifer, the morning star, II. 115, 723; IV. 629, 665; VIII. 2; XV. 189, 789; the father of Ceyx, XI. 271, 346

Lucina, "she who brings to the light," the goddess of childbirth, a name applied both to Juno and Diana, v. 304; IX. 294, 315, 698; X. 507, 510

Luna, the moon goddess, sister of Phoebus Apollo, the heavenly manifestation of Diana on earth, II. 208; VII. 207; XV. 790

Lyaeus, "the deliverer from care," an epithet of Bacchus, IV. 11; VIII. 274, XI. 67

Lycaon: (1) a companion of Acoetes, III. 624, 673; (2) an Assyrian, companion of Phineus, v. 60; (3) a centaur, XII. 302

Lycaon, an early king of Arcadia, whose impious treatment of Jupiter precipitated the destruction of the world for its wickedness, I. 165, 198 ff.; changed into a wolf, I. 237; father of Callisto, II. 495

Lyceus, a companion of Phineus, v. 86

Lyceum, a gymnasium at Athens, adorned with fountains and groves, the favourite resort of philosophers, II. 710

Lycia, a country of Asia Minor, II. 116; IV. 296; VI. 317, 339; IX. 645; XIII. 255

Lycidas, a centaur, XII. 310

Lycope, a centaur, XII. 350

Lycormas, a river in Aetolia, II. 245

Lycia, of Lycetia, a city in Crete, —Cretan, VII. 490

Lycryine, a king of Thrace who opposed Bacchus and was destroyed by him, IV. 22

Lycus: (1) a centaur, XII. 332; (2) a companion of Diomedes, XIV. 504

Lydia, a country in Asia Minor, VI. 11, 146; XI. 98

Lyncestis, of the Lyncestae, a people in Macedonia, Lyncestian, XV. 329

Lynceus, son of Aphareus, took part in the Calydonian boar-hunt, VIII. 304
INDEX

Lynceus, a descendant of Lyneus, father of Abas, whose great-grandson was Perseus, iv. 767; v. 99, 185
Lynceus, a king of Scythia, who attacked Triptolemus and was changed by Ceres into a lynx, v. 660 ff.
Lyrrcus, of Lyrrcum, a mountain between Arcadia and Argolis, i. 593
Lyrrhus, of Lyrhus, a town in the Troad, xii. 108; xiii. 166

Macareis, Isse, the daughter of Macareus (1), vi. 124
Macarens: (1) a Lesbian, vi. 124; (2) a centaur, xii. 452; (3) son of Neritos, companion of Ulysses, xiv. 159, 441; he tells the story of his adventures, xiv. 223 ff.

Macdonius, of Macedonia, xii. 466
Macedonius, of the Macedonians, ix. 574

Maccaurus, a river of Phrygia and Lydia, famous for its winding course, ii. 246; viii. 162; the god of the river, father of Cyane, ix. 451

Maenades, priestesses of Bacchus, Bacchante, xi. 22

Maenalos, and plural, Maenala, a range of mountains in Arcadia, i. 216; ii. 415; v. 608

Maenone, an old name for Lydia, ii. 552; iii. 583; iv. 423; vi. 5, 103 149

Maenon, an epithet of Arachne as a native of Maeonia, vi. 103

Maera, an unknown woman who was changed into a dog, vii. 362

Magnes, the inhabitants of Magnesia in Thessaly. xi. 408

Manto, a Theban seeress, daughter of Tiresias, vi. 157

Marathon, a town and plain on the eastern coast of Attica, vii. 454 Marcotenus, belonging to Mareota, a lake and city of Lower Egypt, ix. 773

Marmarides, from Marmarica, in Egypt, v. 125

Mars (and see Mavors), son of Jupiter and Juno, the god of war, viii. 20; xii. 91; his sacred serpent slain by Cadmus, iii. 32 ff.; father by Venus of Harmonia, wife of Cadmus, iii. 132; his amours with Venus discovered by Phoebus and revealed to Vulcan, iv. 171 ff.; he was the father by Ilios of Romulus and Remus, xv. 863; he is called Gradivus, "he who marches out," vi. 427; xiv. 820; xv. 863; his name is frequently used by metonymy for war or battle, iii. 123, 540; vii. 140; xii. 379, 610; xiii. 11, 208, 360; xiv. 246, 450; xv. 746

Marsyas, a satyr of Phrygia; he challenged Apollo to a contest in musical skill, was beaten, and as a punishment for his presumption was flayed alive by the god; the tears of his weeping friends were changed to the river of that name, vi. 382 ff.

Mavors, an old name for Mars, iii. 531; vi. 70; vii. 101; viii. 7, 61, 437; xiv. 806

Mavortius, belonging to or descended from Mars, applied to the Thebans as descended in part from the Echionides, sprung from the teeth of Mars' sacred dragon, proles Mavortia, iii. 531; to Meleager as the great-grandson of Mars, viii. 437

Medea, daughter of Aetius, king of Colchis; she is called, from father and country, Aetian, vii. 9; Colchis, vii. 296;
INDEX

Phasias, vii. 298; famous for her powers of magic, vii. 98, 116, 137, 148, 152 ff., 199 ff.; when Jason appeared at her father's court she fell in love with him and helped him to perform the three dangerous tasks imposed upon him, and so to obtain the Golden Fleece, vii. 294; she restores Aeson to youth by her magic arts, vii. 162 ff.; she rejuvenates the nurse of Bacchus at the god's request, vii. 294; plots against the life of the aged Pelias and, pretending that she is about to restore him to youth, works his death by the hands of his own daughters, vii. 297 ff.; by her magic causes the death of Creusa, for whom Jason had discarded Medea, and having killed her own two sons also, flees from Jason's vengeance, vii. 394 ff.; takes refuge with Aegeus, who makes her his wife, vii. 402; detected in an attempt to poison Theseus, son of Aegeus, she fled away through the air by her magic powers, vii. 406 ff.

Medon: (1) one of Acoetes' sailors, iii. 671; (2) a centaur, xii. 303

Medusa, one of the Gorgons, daughter of Phorcys, iv. 743; loved by Neptune, in the form of a bird. vi. 119. See Gorgon

Medusa, belonging to Medusa, referring to the petrifying Medusa-head, v. 249; Pegasus, v. 257; the spring of Hippocrene, v. 312; Cerberus, x. 22

Megareus, hero, Hippomenes, son of Megareus, x. 659

Megareus, grandson of Neptune, father of Hippomenes; lived in the Bocotian town of Onchestus, hence called Onchestus, x. 605

Melaneus: (1) a friend of Perseus, v. 128; (2) a centaur, xii. 306

Melantho, a daughter of Deucalion whom Neptune loved in the form of a dolphin, vi. 120

Melanthus, one of Acoetes' sailors, iii. 617

Melas, a river in Thrace, xii. 247

Meleager, son of Oeneus, king of Calydon, and Althaea, daughter of Thesius; at his birth his life was to depend upon the preservation of a billet of wood then burning on the hearth; his mother saved this, but finally burned it in revenge for the slaying by her son of her two brothers, viii. 451 ff.; he organized a hunt for the boar sent by Diana to ravage the country, viii. 299; is smitten with love for Atalanta, one of the hunters, viii. 324; kills the boar and presents the spoils to Atalanta, viii. 414; is insulted by his mother's two brothers and kills them, viii. 432; dies in agony as the result of the burning of the fatal billet by his mother, viii. 515 ff.; one of his sisters is Deianira, ix. 149

Meleagrides, sisters of Meleager, who grieve inordinately at his death, and are turned into guinea-hens by Diana, viii. 536 ff.

Melicerta, son of Athamas and Ino, changed into a sea-god, Palaemon, iv. 522 ff.

Memnon, son of Tithonus and Aurora; while fighting for the Trojans was slain by Achilles; on his funeral-pyre he was changed by Aurora into a bird, xiii. 579 ff.

Memnonides, birds sprung from Memnon's ashes, which every year flew from Ethiopia to Troy and fought over his tomb in his honour, xiii. 608 ff.
INDEX

Aenedesius, of Mendes, a city in Egypt, v. 144
Menelaus, younger son of Atreus, hence called minor Atrides, xii. 623; xv. 162; brother of Agamemnon, husband of Helen, went with Ulysses to Troy to demand back his wife, who had been stolen away by Paris, xiii. 203; slew Euphorbus, xv. 162; fought with Paris, who escaped him in a cloud furnished by Venus, xv. 805
Menephor, an Arcadian who committed incest with his mother, vii. 386
Menoetes, a Lycian, slain by Achilles, xii. 116
Mentihe, a nymph beloved by Proserpina, changed by the goddess into the mint plant, x. 729
Mercurius, the son of Jupiter and Maia, one of the Pleiades, daughter of Atlas, i. 670, 673; ii. 686, 697, 742; xi. 303; called Atlantiades, i. 682; ii. 704; viii. 627; Cyllenius, from his birthplace, Cyllene, a mountain in Arcadia, i. 713; ii. 720, 818; v. 331; xii. 146; xiv. 291; he is the swift messenger of Jupiter and the other gods and flies through the air equipped with wings on his low-crowned hat and on his ankles, and with his wand, the caduceus, which soothes to sleep, i. 671, 716; ii. 708, 714, 735, 818; xv. 756; viii. 627; xi. 307, 312; xiv. 291; his wand can also open doors, ii. 819; he carries also a peculiar hooked sword, i. 717; as god of cunning and theft, he steals the cattle of Apollo, ii. 686; kills Argus at the request of Jupiter, i. 670 ff.; changes Battus into a touchstone, ii. 706 ff.; helps Jupiter to trick Europa, ii. 836; takes refuge from the Giants in the form of an ibis bird, v. 331; changes Aiauro into a stone, ii. 818; in company with Jupiter is entertained by Philemon and Baucis, viii. 627 ff.; loves Herse, ii. 724 ff.; father by Venus of Hermaphroditus, iv. 288; father by Chione of Autolycus xi. 303; through Autolycus he is the great-grandfather of Ulysses, xiii. 146
Meriones, a companion of Idomeneus from Crete, xiii. 359
Mermeros, a centaur, xii. 305
Merops, king of Ethiopia, husband of Clymene, the putative father of Phaethon, i. 723; ii. 134
Messanius, of Messana, a city in Sicily, xiv. 17
Messapius, of the Messapians, a people of Lower Italy, — Calabrian, xiv. 514
Messene, a city of Messenia in the Peloponnesus, vi. 417; xii. 549 METHYMNAEUS, of Methymna, one of the chief cities of Lesbos, xi. 55
Metion, father of Phorbas of Syene, v. 74
Midas, king of Phrygia, son of Gordius and Cybele; called Berecyntius heros from Mount Berecyntus in Phrygia, sacred to Cybele, xi. 106; because of the king's kindness to Silenus, Bacchus promised him the fulfillment of any wish he might express, and he wished that all he touched might turn to gold xi. 92 ff.; this baleful power is washed away in the River Pactolus, xi. 142 ff.; he again shows his stupidity by questioning Tmolus' judgment in favour of Apollo versus Pan, and is given the ears of an ass, xi. 146 ff.
INDEX

Miletus, Byblos, the daughter of Miletus, ix. 635
Miletus, son of Phoebus and Deloe, Deloides, ix. 443; father by Cyanee of Caunus and Byblos, founder of the city which bears his name, ix. 444
Milon, an athlete of Crotone, weeps in his old age at the loss of his strength, xv. 299
Minas, a mountain range in Ioula, ii. 222
Minerva, daughter of Jupiter, sprung from his head, iv. 800; v. 297; goddess of wisdom and technical skill, iv. 33; vi. 6, 23; patroness of men of genius, viii. 252; inventor of the flute, vi. 384; protectress of heroes: Perseus, iv. 754; v. 46, 250; Cadmus, iii. 102; Theseus, xii. 860; Diomede, xiv. 475; the virgin goddess, ii. 765; iv. 754; v. 375; viii. 664; xiv. 468; her locks are golden, ii. 749; viii. 275; she is the warrior goddess, ii. 752, 756; iv. 754; vi. 46; vii. 264; she is armed with shield and spear, and on her aegis she wears the Gorgon-head, ii. 755; iv. 799, 803; vi. 78; xiv. 475; her earlier favourite bird was the crow, but later the owl, ii. 563; her favourite tree, the olive, vi. 335; viii. 275, 664; her favourite abode, Athens and Attica, ii. 709, 712; viii. 250; strove with Neptune for the right to name the land, vi. 70 ff.; her festival, the Panathenaea, ii. 711 ff.; entrusts Erichthonius to the daughters of Cecrops, ii. 553; sends the hag Envy to torment Aglauros, ii. 752; turns the hair of Medusa into snakes, iv. 798; accepts the challenge of Arachne to a contest in weaving, and after defeating her turns her into a spider to punish her presumption, vi. 26 ff.; changes Perdix to a plover, viii. 252; her sacred image, the Palladium, stolen from her temple at Troy by Ulysses and Diomede, xiii. 337, 381; the promontory of Minerva off the coast of Campania in Italy, xv. 709; Minerva used by metonymy for household tasks, iv. 33; for olive oil, xiii. 653. See Pallas, Tritonl., Tritonis Minois, Ariadne, daughter of Minos, viii. 174
Minos, son of Jupiter and Europa, viii. 120, 122; ix. 437; dux Europaeus, viii. 23; king of Crete, where he rules over numerous (centum) cities, vii. 481; threatens war at Athens for the death of his son Androgeos, and seeks allies against her, vii. 456 ff.; seeks aid of Acaeus in vain, vii. 482 ff.; wars against King Nisus at Megara, where he is loved by Scylla, who betrays to him her father, Nisus, viii. 6 ff.; shuts up the Minotaur in a labyrinth which Daedalus made at his command, viii. 157; reduced to weakness in his old age, he fears Miletus, ix. 441; Jupiter is unable to grant him immortality, ix. 437
Minotaurus, a monster, half man and half bull, son of Pasiphae, wife of Minos, and a bull, viii. 132; shut up by Minos in the labyrinth, viii. 155; here were brought to him each year seven boys and seven maidens as a tribute exacted of the Athenians by Minos to be devoured, until he was finally slain by Theseus, viii. 169 ff.
Minturnae, a city of Latium on the border of Campania, xv. 716

471
INDEX

Minyae, an ancient race named from their king, Minyas, whose seat was Orchomenus in Boeotia; his power extended also to Iolchus in Thessaly; since from this point the Argonauts under Jason started on their expedition, they are called Minyae, vi. 720; vii. 1; viii. 115

Minyeias, Aleithoë, daughter of Minyas, iv. 1

Minyeias proles = Minyei'des, iv. 389

Minyei'des, the three daughters of Minyas, Leuconoe, Arsippa, and Aleithoë, who were changed into bats for slitting the festival of Bacchus, iv. 82, 425

Misenus (a mortal), a son of Aeolus, a trumpeter of Aeolus, who lost his life at the promontory in Italy which bears his name, xiv. 103

Mithridates, a king of Pontus; six kings of this name had ruled over Pontus, and the last, Mithridates the Great, was conquered by Lucullus and Pompey in 63 B.C., xv. 755

Mnemonides, the nine Muses as the daughters of Mnemosyne, v. 268, 280

Mnemosyne, the mother by Jupiter of the Muses, vi. 114

Molossus, belonging to the Molossi, gens Molossus, a people of Epirus, i. 226; rex Molossus, Munichus, who, with his wife and children, was once attacked by robbers; while they resisted the robbers the building in which they were was set on fire; to save them from burning to death, Jupiter changed them into birds, xiii. 717

Molpeus, of Chaonia, a friend of Phineus, v. 163, 168

Monychus, a centaur, xii. 499

Mopsophas, Athenian, from Mopsophas, an ancient king; Triptolemus, v. 661; the walls of Athens, vi. 423

Mopsus, son of Ampyx, see Ampycides; he was a soothsayer among the Lapithae, took part in the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 316, 350; was in the fight against the centaurs, xii. 466, 524

Morphens, a son of Somnus, sent to Alcyone in the form of Ceyx, xi. 635, 647, 671

Mulciber, a name for Vulcan, in reference to him as a worker in metals, ii. 5; ix. 423; by metonymy for fire, ix. 263; xiv. 553

Monychia, of Monychia, the port of Athens, = Athenian, ii. 709

Musae, the nine Muses, daughters of Jupiter and Mnemosyne, patronesses of the liberal arts; they were: Clio, Muse of history; Melpomene, of tragedy; Thalia, of comedy; Enterpe, of lyric poetry; Terpsichore, of dancing; Calliope, of epic poetry; Erato, of love poetry; Urania, of astronomy; Polyhymnia, of sacred song; Calliope and Urania are the only two of the sisters mentioned by name in the Metamorphoses; in v. 260 Urania takes the lead in entertaining Minerva, and in v. 339 ff. Calliope slugs as the representative of her sisters in the contest with the Pierides, and in v. 662 she is called the eldest sister, e nobis maxima; their favourite haunts were Mount Helicon and Mount Parnassus, where their sacred springs were Aganippe and Hippocrene on the one, and Castalia on the other, v. 663; Helicon is hence called Virgineus, ii. 219; v. 254; they are doctae sorores, “the learned sisters,” v. 255; “the especial divinities of poets,” praesentia numina vatuum, xv. 622; Calliope was the mother of Orpheus, x. 148; assaulted by King Pyreneus, the Muses fly away on wings, v. 274 ff.; contend with the Phlegrae in song, and afterwards change the presumptuous sisters into magpies, v. 294 ff., 676. See Aonides and Thespiades.
INDEX

Mutina, a city in Cisalpine Gaul, xv. 823

Mycale: (1) a promontory in Ionia, ii. 223; (2) a Thessalian witch, xii. 263

Myeanae, a city of Argolis, the home of Agamemnon, vi. 414; xii. 34; xv. 426, 428

Myeneus, a woman of Mycenaean, Iphigenia, xii. 34

Mygdonia, Mygdonian, of the Mygdonians, a Thracian people, ii. 247, who emigrated to Phrygia, = Phrygian, vi. 45

Myrmidonian, a race of men created out of ants by Jupiter in answer to the prayer of Aeacus, vii. 615 ff., 654

Myrrha, daughter of Cinyras, conceived for her father an incestuous passion, and became by him the mother of Adonis, x. 312 ff.; was changed to the myrrh-tree, x. 489 ff.

Myacleus, son of Alemon of Argos, founder of Crotona, xv. 19 ff.

Mysus, of Mysia, Mysian, a country in Asia Minor, xv. 277

Nabataeus, of Nabataea, a country in Arabia, = Arabian, i. 61; v. 163

Naiai, Naïs, plural Naïades and Naïdes, water nymphs, female deities of rivers and springs, i. 642, 691; ii. 325; iv. 49, 289, 304; vi. 329, 453; viii. 580; ix. 87, 657; x. 9, 514; xi. 49; xiv. 328, 557, 758

Narcissus, son of the Naiad Liriope and the river-god Cephalus, iii. 342, 351; his fate foretold by Tiresias, iii. 346; vainly loved by Echo, iii. 370 ff.; falls hopelessly in love with his own image reflected from the water, iii. 407 ff.; his shade still gazes on its image in the Stygian pool, iii. 505; his body is changed into a flower that bears his name, iii. 510

Naryx, of the Naryctis, a city of the Locrians, viii. 312; xv. 705; an epithet of Ajax, son of Oileus, xiv. 468

Nasamonicus, of the Nasamonis, a Libyan people south-west of Cyrenaica, v. 129

Naupliades, Palamedes, son of Nauplius, xii. 39, 310

Nauplius, a king of Euboea, father of Palamedes. See Caphareus

Naxos, the largest of the Cyclades, iii. 636, 640, 649

Nedymnus, a centaur, xii. 350

Nelius, Nestor, the son of Neleus, xii. 577

Neleus, son of Neptune and the nymph Tyro, xii. 558; king of Pylos, ii. 689; father of Nestor, he had twelve sons, all of whom except Nestor were killed by Hercules, xii. 550 ff.

Nelleus, belonging to Neleus, vi. 418; xii. 558

Nelides, the twelve sons of Neleus, xii. 553

Nemeaenaeus, belonging to Nemea, a town in Argolis, ix. 197, 235

Nemesis, a Greek goddess, personifying the righteous anger of the gods, who punishes mortal pride and presumption, iii. 406; xiv. 694. See Rhamnusia
INDEX

Neoptolemus, son of Achilles, called also Pyrrhus, xiii. 455
Nephele: (1) a nymph in Diana's train, iii. 171; (2) the wife of Athamas, mother of Phrixus and Helle, xi. 195
Nepheleis, Helle, the daughter of Nephele, xi. 195
Neptunius, an epithet used of Theseus as the supposed son of Neptune, ix. 1; of Hippomenes, the great-grandson, x. 639, 665; of Cyclus, the son, xii. 72
Neptunus, the son of Saturn, brother of Jupiter and Pluto; to him by lot in the division of the kingdom of the de-throned Saturn fell the realms of the sea and other waters, i. 275, 276, 331; ii. 270, 574; iv. 533, 533; viii. 555; x. 606; xi. 207; xii. 580; the symbol of his power is the trident, i. 283; viii. 596; xi. 202; xii. 580; father of Neleus by the nymph Tyro, xii. 558; grandfather of Megarens, x. 606; was said to have been the father of Theseus by Aethra, wife of Aegeus, ix. 1; father of Cyclus, xii. 72; his amours were: with Corone, ii. 574; Medusa, iv. 798; vi. 119; Canace, vi. 116; Iphimedia, daughter of Aloeus, vi. 117; Theophane, daughter of Bisaltes, vi. 117; with Ceres, vi. 118; with Melantho, vi. 120; Mestra, daughter of Erysichthon, viii. 350; he helps produce the flood, i. 275; changes Ino and Melicert into sea-divinitities, iv. 539 ff.; disputes with other gods his claim to Athens, vi. 75; with Apollo built the walls of Troy for Laomedon, xi. 202; xii. 26, 587; in punishment of Laomedon's treachery in refusing to pay the promised reward, he flooded the country and required that Laomedon's daughter, He- slone, be offered up as a sacrifice to a sea-monster, xi. 207 ff.; gave Periclemenus power to change to many forms, xii. 558; grieving over the death of Cyclus at the hands of Achilles, he plans with Apollo to compass Achilles' death, xii. 580
Nereis, a sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus; Thetis, xi. 259, xiii. 93; Galatea, xiii. 742, 749, 858; Psamathe, the mother of Phocus, xi. 380; in plural, i. 302; v. 17; xiii. 899; xiv. 264
Nereus, belonging to Nereus, used of Phocus as son of the Nereid Psamathe, vii. 685; of Thetis, genetrix Nereia, xiii. 162
Neretum, a town in Calabria, xv. 51
Nereus, a sea-god, husband of Doris, father of fifty daughters, the Nereids, ii. 268; xi. 361; xii. 94; xiii. 742; by metonymy for the sea, i. 187; xii. 24
Neritius, of Neritós, a mountain in Ithaca, and a small island in its vicinity. —Ithacan, xiii. 712; xiv. 159, 563
Nessus, a centaur, son of Ixion, ix. 124; slain by Hercules for attempting violence on Deianira while he was carrying her across a stream; he gave a portion of his blood, poisoned by the arrow of Hercules, to Deianira as a charm warranted to regain wan-lug love, ix. 101 ff.; this charm was used by Deianira with fatal effect, ix. 153 ff.; Nessus was safe in the great fight between the centaurs and the Lapithae because he was doomed to die by the hand of Hercules, xii. 308, 454
INDEX

Nestor, son of Neleus, king of Pylos, one of twelve brothers, all of whom were killed by Hercules except himself, viii. 365; xii. 550 ff.; in his youth he participated in the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 313; he was famous among the Greeks at Troy for his wisdom and eloquence, xii. 178, 577; after the death of Cycnus, he tells the story of Caenis, a girl changed into the invulnerable youth Caeneus, xii. 169 ff.; he explains to Tlepolemus the cause of his hatred for Hercules, xii. 542 ff.; was deserted in his need by Ulysses on the battlefield, xiii. 63

Nilus, an opponent of Perseus, who boasted that he was descended from the Nilus river-god, v. 187

Nilus, the great river and river-god of Egypt, i. 423, 728; xi. 254; v. 187, 324; ix. 774; xv. 753

Ninus, an Assyrian king, husband of Semiramis, iv. 83

Niobe, daughter of the Phrygian king Tantalus and of Dione, one of the Pleiades, daughter of Atlas, vi. 172, 174, 211; wife of Amphion, king of Thebes, vi. 178, 271; mother of seven sons and seven daughters, on account of her boastful pride in whom she aroused the wrath of Latona (see Latona), vi. 165 ff.; at last, in her stony grief, she was changed to a stone and carried to her native Mount Sipylius, where the tears still flow down her stony face, vi. 305 ff.

Nisiea virgo, Scylla, the daughter of Nisus, viii. 35

Nisus, a king of Megara, besieged by Minos; he had a purple lock of hair upon the preservation of which his life and kingdom depended; this lock his daughter Scylla, secretly in love with Minos, cut off and gave to her father’s enemy, viii. 8 ff.

Nixi patres, three guardian deities of women in labour; their statues stood in the Capitoll at Rome, representing the gods in a kneeling posture, ix. 294

Nixus genu, “the one beuding his knee,” the constellation of the kneeling Hercules, viii. 182

Noéomon, a Lycian, xiii. 258

Nonacria, Nonacrius, from Nonacris, a mountain and city in Arcadia, —Arcadian, i. 690; ii. 409; viii. 426

Noricus, of Noricum, a country lying between the Danube and the Alps, xiv. 712

Notus, the south wind, bringer of rain, i. 264

Nox, goddess of Night, daughter of Chaos, mother of the Furies, iv. 452; xiv. 404

Numius Pompilius, the second king of Rome, goes to Crotona to study the philosophy of Pythagoras, xv. 4 ff.; marries the nymph Egerla, xv. 482; dies at a ripe old age, xv. 485

Numicins, a small river in Latium, xiv. 328, 599

Numidae, a people in Northern Africa, conquered by Caesar in 46 B.C. at the battle of Thapsus, xv. 754

Numitor, king of Alba, driven from his throne by his brother Amulius, but restored by his grandsons, Romulus and Remus, xiv. 773

Nycteus, Antelope, daughter of the Boeotian king Nycteus; mother by Jupiter of Zethus and Amphion, vi. 111
INDEX

Nyctellus, a name of Bacchus from the fact that his mysteries were performed at night, iv. 15

Nycteus (not the father of Antiope), a companion of Diomede, changed by Venus into a bird, xiv. 504

Nyctimene, daughter of Epopeus, king of Lesbos, who unknowingly had intercourse with her father; in despair she fled into the forest, where she was changed by Minerva into an owl, ii. 590 ff.

Nyseides, the nymphs of Mount Nysa in India, who cared for the infant Bacchus in their caves, iii. 314; Bacchus obtained their rejuvenation from Medea, vii. 295

Nyseus, an epithet of Bacchus from Mount Nysa, iv. 13

Oceanus, the great all-encircling sea, the ocean, vii. 267; ix. 594; xiii. 292; xv. 12; personified, a deity, son of Coelus and Terra, husband of his sister, Tethys, ii. 610; ix. 499; xiii. 951

Ocyrohœ, a daughter of Chiron endowed with the gift of prophecy; she foretells the fates of Aesculapius, ii. 635 ff.; is changed into a mare, ii. 657 ff.

Odrysus, an epithet from a tribe in Thrace, used for Thracian in general, referring to Terens, vi. 490; Polycemestor, xiii. 554

Oeagrus, an epithet from Oeagrus, an old king of Thrace; nondum Oeagrus = before the time of Oeagrus, ii. 219

Oechallides. See Hyacinthus

Oebalides. See Hyacinthus

Oechalla, a city in Euboea, ix. 156, 331

Oechalides, the women of Oechalla, ix. 331

Oeclides, Amphiaraüs as the son of Oeclens. See Amphiaraüs

Oedipodionae, an epithet of Thebes as the city of Oedipus, xv. 429. See Laïades Oenens, king of Calydon, son of Parthaon, husband of Althaea, father of Meleager, Tydeus, and Deianira, viii. 486; ix. 12; incurred the wrath of Diana, who sent a huge boar to ravage his country, viii. 273 ff.

Oenides, a male descendant of Oenens; Meleager, his son, viii. 414; Diomede, his grandson, xiv. 512

Oenopia, an older name for the island of Aegina, vii. 472, 490

Octaëns, an epithet of King Ceyx, because his city of Trachin lay near Mount Oeta, xi. 383

Oetia (Oeta), a mountain range between Thessaly and Aetolia, i. 313; ii. 217; ix. 155, 204, 230, 249; xi. 333

Oileus, king of the Locrians, father of Ajax (2), xiii. 622

Olenides, Tectaphus, the son of Olenus, xii. 433

Olenius, of Olenus, an ancient city in Achaia, iii. 594

Olenus, the husband of Lethaea, changed with her into a stone, wishing thus, though innocent, to share her guilt and punishment, x. 69

Oliaeus, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 469

Olympus: (1) a mountain in Northern Thessaly, supposed in the Homeric age to be the home of the gods, i. 154, 212; ii. 60, 225; vi. 476; vii. 225; ix. 499; xiii. 761; (2) a pupil and friend of Marsyas, vi. 393

476
INDEX

Onchestus, from Onchestus, a city in Boeotia, x. 605
Onetos, a Phocian, herdsman of Peleus, xi. 348
Opheltos, a companion of Aeocetes, III. 605
Ophias, Combe, daughter of Ophius, VII. 383
Ophionides, Amycus, a centaur, son of Ophion, xii. 245
Ophiusa, a constellation in the north-eastern heavens, the "Serpent-holder," VIII. 182
Ophiusa, of Ophiusa, an old name for Cyprus, x. 229
Ops, an old Italian deity, goddess of plenty, patroness of husbandry, the wife of Saturn, ix. 493
Orchamus, an ancient king of Babylon, father of Leucotoë, iv. 212; buries his daughter alive on learning of her amour with the Sun-god, iv. 240
Orchomenus, a city in Arcadia, v. 607; VI. 416
Orclus, the underworld, abode of the dead; also a name for Pluto, as god of the underworld, xiv. 116
Oreas, one of the mountain-nymphs, VIII. 787
Orestes, from or belonging to Orestes, son of Agamemnon; applied to Diana, because Orestes with Pytades and Iphigenia, priestess of Diana in Tauris, carried away the image of Diana to Atricia in Italy, xv. 489
Orion, a celebrated giant, once a mighty hunter on earth, now set as a constellation in the heavens with his two hunting-dogs near him, and with a glittering sword girt about his waist, VIII. 207; xiii. 294; the two daughters of Orion were Menippe and Metioche, who at a time of pestilence at Thebes slew themselves as a voluntary offering in the people's stead, xiii. 692
Orion, one of the Lapithae, XII. 262
Orithya, daughter of the Athenian king Erechtheus, sister of Procris, wooed and roughly carried off by Bocas, VI. 683, 707; VII. 695
Orneus, a centaur, XII. 302
Orutes, a river of Syria, II. 248
Orpheus, a famous mythical musician of Thrace, son of Oceagrus (or of Apollo, XI. 8) and Calliope, husband of Eurydice; after her death he goes to the underworld to gain her back, x. 3 ff.; losing her a second time, he is inconsolable, and spends his time in playing on his lyre, x. 72 ff.; he is torn in pieces by the Ciconian women, XI. 1 ff.; his shade rejoins Eurydice in the underworld, XI. 61; he is called Rhodopeus, X. 11; Thracicus, XI. 2; Apollinellis, XI. 8; Thracius, XI. 99
Orphne, a nymph of the underworld, mother of Ascalaphus by Acheron, V. 539
Ortygia: (1) one of the earlier names of the island of Delos, from Ὄρυξ, a quail, XV. 337; hence an epithet of Diana, who was born on Delos, i. 694; (2) a part of the city of Syracuse, lying on an island in the harbour, v. 499, 640
Osiris, an Egyptian deity, god of fertility, husband of Isis, IX. 693
Ossa, a mountain in Thessaly, I. 155; II. 225; VII. 224; XII. 319
Othrys, a mountain in Thessaly, II. 221; VII. 225, 353; XII. 173, 513 Pachynus, the south-eastern promontory of Sicily, XII. 725
INDEX

Pactolides, nymphs of the Pactolus, vi. 16
Pactolus, a river in Lydia, vi. 16; xi. 87
Padus, the Po, a river in Italy, ii. 258
Paean, a name of Apollo as the deity of healing, i. 566; a religious hymn in his honour, xiv. 720
Paeones, the Paeonians, a people of Northern Macedonia, v. 303, 313
Paeonius, an adjective from Paean as if from Paeon, belonging to Apollo as god of healing, and transferred to his son, Aesculapius, xv. 635
Paestum, a city in Italy, in Lucania, xv. 708
Pagasaens, from Pagasa, a maritime town of Thessaly, where the Argo was built, vii. 1; xii. 412; xiii. 24; an epithet of Jason from his native district, viii. 349
Palaimon, the sea-god into whom Melicerta was changed, iv. 542; called Athamantiades, since as a mortal he was the son of Athamas, xiii. 919
Palaeestinus, of Palestine, and in general—Syrian, iv. 46; v. 145
Palamedes, the son of Nauplius, Naupliades, xiii. 39; he disclosed Ulysses' trick of assumed madness before the Trojan war, xiii. 36 ff.; he himself suffered for this, for he was done to death through the treachery of Ulysses, who hid a store of gold in Palamedes' tent and pretended that it was a bribe from Priam, xiii. 38, 56 ff., 308 ff.
Palatinus, of or belonging to the Palatine Hill, Palatine, xv. 560; = Latin, xiv. 622
Palatinum, one of the seven hills of Rome, the Palatine Hill, xiv. 332, 382; since Augustus built his palace on this hill, the imperial palace came to be called Palatia, i. 176
Palici, sons of Jupiter and the nymph Thalia, worshipped in Sicily at Palica, where a temple and two lakes were sacred to them, v. 406
Palilia, the feast of Palca, the god of shepherds, celebrated on April 21, the day on which Rome was founded, xiv. 774
Palladium, an image of Pallas, said to have fallen from heaven at Troy; upon its preservation the safety of Troy was said by an oracle to depend; the image was captured by Ulysses and Diomedes, xiii. 99, 337, 381
Palladius, belonging to Pallas, vii. 399, 733; viii. 275
Pallantias and Pallantis, Aurora as daughter of the Titan, Pallas, ix. 421; xv. 191, 700
Pallas (gen. Palladis), a surname of the Greek goddess Athene, corresponding to the Roman Minerva, used in Ovid interchangeably with Minerva; she hides the infant Erichthonius in a box and gives this to the daughters of Cecrops to guard, ii. 553 ff.; her festival at Athens, ii. 712; sends the hag Envy to punish Aglauros, ii. 752 ff.; Athens is named from her, ii. 834; bids Cadmus sow the teeth of the slain dragon in the ground, iii. 102; daughters of Minyas, scorning Bacchus, worship Pallas as representing household arts, iv. 33; she helps Perseus, who is here called her brother, v. 46; visits the Muses on Mount Helicon, who entertain her with various tales, v. 254 ff.; is a virgin goddess, v.
INDEX

875; goddess of the arts, vi. 23; encounters Arachne, vi. 26 ff.; her armour described, vi. 78; gives olive-tree to Athens, vi. 81, 335; saves Perdix from death and changes him into a bird, viii. 252; used for her image, the Palladium, xiii. 99. See Minerva

Pallas (gen. Pallantis): (1) an Athenian prince, son of Pandion, vii. 500, 665; (2) a Titan, father of Aurora; see Pallantis and Pallantis

Pallene, a peninsula of Macedonia, xv. 356

Pan, the god of woods and shepherds, xi. 160; is himself half goat in form, xiv. 515; lives in mountain caves, xi. 147; xiv. 514; wears a wreath of pine-needles, i. 699; pursues the nymph Syrinx, who escapes him by being changed into marsh reeds, i. 701 ff.; makes the syrinx or "pipes of Pan" out of these reeds, i. 709 ff.; worshipped by Midas, xi. 147; challenges Apollo and is defeated in a contest with pipes and lyre, xi. 153 ff.; in plural, classed with Fauns and Satyrs, xiv. 638

Panchaeus, of Panchaia, an island east of Arabia, x. 309, 480

Pandion, a king of Athens, father of Procne and Philomela, vi. 426; gives Procne in marriage to the Thracian Terens, vi. 428; entrusts Philomela to Terens' care, vi. 483; dies of woe for his daughters' wrongs, vi. 676

Pandioniae, an epithet of Athens from its king, Pandion, xv. 430

Pandrosos, one of the daughters of Cecrops, ii. 559, 738

Panomphaeus, "author of all oracles," an epithet of Jupiter, xi. 198

Panope, a city in Phocis, iii. 19
Panopeus, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 312

Panthoïdes, Euphorbus, son of Panthoüs, xv. 161

Paphius, belonging to Paphos, a city in the island of Cyprus sacred to Venus, Paphius heros, Pygmalion, x. 290

Paphos: (1) a city on the island of Cyprus, x. 290, 530; (2) son of Pygmalion and his ivory statue which was changed by Venus into a woman, x. 297

Paraetonium, a seaport town in Northern Africa, ix. 778

Parcae, three sisters, arbiters of human destiny, personification of fate; their decrees are unalterable, may be known and revealed by Jupiter, but he is powerless to change them, v. 532; viii. 452; xv. 781, 808; they were present at the birth of Meleager, viii. 452

Paris, the son of Priam and Hecuba, brother of Hector; stole away Helen, the wife of Menelaüs, and so brought war upon his country, xii. 4, 609; xiii. 200; by Apollo's direction he shoots the fatal arrow at Achilles, xii. 601; saved by Venus in a cloud from death at the hands of Menelaüs, xv. 805

Parnasius, from or belonging to Parnasus, a mountain in Phocis, sacred to Apollo and the Muses; at its foot was the city of Delphi, where were Apollo's temple and oracle, hence templum Parnasia, v. 278; Themis had held this oracle in ancient times before Apollo, i. 321; hence she also is called Parnasia, iv. 643

Parnasus, a mountain in Phocis, sacred to Apollo and the Muses.
INDEX

I. 317, 467; II. 221; IV. 643; v. 278; xi. 165, 339
Parthenope, an old name for the city of Naples, xiv. 101; xv. 712
Pasiphaë, daughter of the Sun, ix. 736; wife of Minos, mother of Daedalus, xv. 500; through the spite of Venus she was inspired with a mad passion for a beautiful bull, viii. 136; ix. 736; which she gratified by means of a wooden cow framed for her by Daedalus, viii. 132; ix. 740; of this union the Minotaur was born, viii. 133, 169. See Minotaur and Theseus Pasiphaëia, Phaedra, daughter of Pasiphaë, xv. 500
Patareus of Patara, a city in Lydia, l. 516
Patrae, an ancient city in Achala, vi. 417
Patroclus, a friend of Achilles; clad in the armour of the latter, drives back the Trojans, xiii. 273. See Actorides Peacock, the bird sacred to Juno; after the death of Argus Juno places his numerous eyes in the peacock's tail, l. 723; II. 533
Pegasus, a winged horse sprung from the blood of Medusa when her head was struck off by Perseus; at the same time there came forth Chrysaor, brother of Pegasus, iv. 786; v. 259; Neptune is said to have been the father of these, vi. 119; the spring Hippocrene, "horse's fountain," on Mount Helicon sprang forth from the stroke of his hoof, v. 257
Pelagon, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 360
Pelasgi, one of the most ancient peoples of Greece. = Grecians, vii. 49, 133; xii. 7, 19, 612; xiii. 128, 268; xiv. 562; xv. 452
Pelates: (1) a companion of Phinicus, v. 124; (2) one of the Lapithae, xii. 255
Polethronius, belonging to a region of Thessaly inhabited by the centaurs and the Lapithae, xii. 452
Pelens, son of Aeacus, Aeacides, xi. 227, 246; brother of Telamon and half-brother of Phocus, vii. 477; xiii. 151; husband of Thetis, story of his wooing, xi. 217 ff., 260; xii. 193; he is thus the son-in-law of Nereus as well as the grandson of Jupiter, xi. 219; the father of Achilles, xi. 265; xii. 605, 619; xiii. 155; and is surpassed by him, xv. 856; he took part in the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 309, 380; and in the battle of the centaurs and Lapithae, xii. 366, 388; accidentally killed his half-brother, Phocus, son of the Nereid Psamathe, fled from home and found asylum with Ceyx, king of Trachin, xi. 266 ff.; here his cattle, herded on the seashore, are attacked by a monstrous wolf sent by Psamathe, xi. 349 ff.; the hero finally gains absolution for his blood-guiltiness at the hands of Acastus, king of Thessaly, xi. 409
Pelias, half-brother of Aeson, whom he had driven from the throne or kolchos in Thessaly; he sends Aeson's son, Jason, on the dangerous quest of the Golden Fleece; Medea, brought back by Jason from Colchis, plots against the life of Pelias, and works his destruction by the hands of his own daughters, vii. 297 ff.
INDEX

Pelides, Achilles, son of Peleus, xii. 603, 619
Pelion, a high mountain in Thessaly, i. 155; vii. 224, 352; xii. 74
Pellaeus, of Pella, a city in Macedonia, v. 302; xii. 254
Pelopeia, Pelopeia, belonging to Pelops, vi. 414; viii. 622
Pelops, son of Tantalius, brother of Niobe; in his childhood his father cut him in pieces and served him to the gods in order to test their divinity; the gods perceived the hoax at once, but Ceres abstractedly ate a piece of the boy's shoulder; the boy was made whole again by the gods, and the lost shoulder replaced by a piece of ivory, vi. 404 ff.
Pelorus, a promontory on the northeast coast of Sicily, v. 350; xiii. 727; xv. 706
Penates, old Latin guardian deities of the household whose images were kept within the central part of the house, i. 231; iii. 539; viii. 91; xv. 864; used more commonly by metonymy for the house or home itself, i. 174, 773; v. 155, 496, 650; vii. 574; viii. 637; ix. 446, 639; xii. 551
Peneis and Peneia, belonging to the river-god Peneus; his daughter, the nymph Daphne, i. 452, 472, 528; ii. 504; Peneidas undas, i. 544; Peneia arva, xii. 209
Penelope, the wife of Ulysses, daughter-in-law of Laërtes, viii. 315; Hecuba bewails that she is to be a gift to Penelope, xiii. 511
Peneus, a river in Thessaly, rising on Pindus and flowing through the beautiful valley of Tempe, i. 569; vii. 230; xii. 209; the river-god, father of Daphne, i. 452; receives condolences of other rivers on loss of Daphne, i. 574 ff.; suffers from conflagration caused by Phaethon, ii. 243
Pentheus, son of Echion and Agave, king of Thebes; flouts Tiresias and is warned by him not to oppose Bacchus, iii. 513 ff.; opposes introduction of Bacchic rites, iii. 531 ff.; goes to Cithaeron to spy on the Bacchanales, and is torn in pieces by his crazed mother and the other women, iii. 701 ff.; iv. 429
Peparethus, an island north of Euboea, vii. 470
Perdix, son of the sister of Daedalus, very inventive; his uncle in envy pushed him off a cliff, but Minerva saved him from death by changing him into a bird, viii. 237 ff.
Pergamum, Pergama, the citadel of Troy, more frequently used for Troy itself, xii. 445, 591; xiii. 169, 219, 320, 574, 507, 520; xiv. 467; xv. 442
Pergus, a lake in Sicily near the city of Enna, v. 386
Pericleumus, son of Neleus, brother of Nestor, grandson of Neptune, from whom he had the power of changing his shape; in the form of an eagle he was killed by an arrow of Hercules, xii. 556 Perimele, daughter of Hippodamas, loved by the river-god Acheloüs, and changed by Neptune at her lover's prayer into an island, viii. 590 ff.

Periphas: (1) an ancient Attic king, held in so high honour by his people that he excited the enmity of Jupiter, who would have killed him, but at Apollo's request he changed him into an eagle and his wife Phene into an osprey, vii. 400; (2) one of the Lapithae, xii. 449

Periphetes, a monstrous son of Vulcan who lived at Epidauros and slew all travellers with an iron club until he was himself slain by Theseus, vii. 437

Perseis, Hecate, daughter of the Titan Perses, vii. 74

Perseius, belonging to Perseus, his camp or party, v. 128

Persephone, the Greek name for Proserpina, v. 470; x. 15, 730

Perseus, son of Danaë and Jupiter, who appeared to her in the form of a golden shower, iv. 610, 640; v. 250; vi. 113; grandson of Acrisius, iv. 613; relates how he gained the Gorgon-head, iv. 772 ff.; flies through the air bearing the Gorgon-head which petrifies all who look upon it, iv. 615; he is equipped with the wings and sword of Mercury, iv. 665; and the bronze shield of Minerva, iv. 782; Minerva was his helper in all his adventures, v. 250; his adventure with Atlas, whom he changes into a rocky mountain, iv. 632 ff.; he finds Andromeda chained to a rock, fights and kills the sea-monster which had been sent to devour her, and claims the maiden as his wife, iv. 670 ff.; Cepheus, king of Ethiopia, father of Andromeda, joyfully receives him as son-in-law, iv. 738; he fights Phineus and his friends, who try to break the proposed marriage, and finally overcomes them by the aid of the Gorgon-head, v. 1 ff.; drives Proetus from the throne of Acrisius and slays him with sight of the Gorgon-head, v. 236 ff.; in like manner he slays Polydectes, v. 242 ff.; his epithets are: Abantiades, Acrisloniades, Agenorides, Danaeius, Inachides, Lynclides

Pervis, Perisan, l. 62

Petræus, a centaur, xii. 327, 330

Pettaleus, a companion of Phineus, v. 115

Peucetius, of Peneetia, a region in Apulia, xiv. 514

Phaeaces, the Phaeacians, the fabled inhabitants of the island of Sceria, who lived in great luxury, xiii. 719

Phaedimus, one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 239

Phaedra, daughter of Pasiaphaë and Minos, wife of Theseus; loved her stepson Hippolytus, and being repulsed accursed him to his father and so brought him to death, xv. 500 ff.

Phaeocomes, a centaur, xii. 431

Phaestias, Phaestis, of Phaestus, a city of Crete, ix. 669, 716

Phaéthon, grandson of Tethys, ii. 166; son of Phoebus and Clymene, the wife of the Ethiopian king Merops, i. 751, 763, 771; ii. 19, 48, 184; goes to Phoebus and asks for proofs of his sonship, ii. 35; granted anything he may desire, he asks for permission to drive the chariot of his father for one day, ii. 48 ff.; starts on his course through the sky, ii. 150 ff.; hurled from the chariot and killed by the thunderbolt of Jupiter, ii. 311 ff.; falls to earth
INDEX

on the bank of the Po, where the Nalads find and bury him, xi. 324 ff.

Phaëthon teis, pertaining to Phaëthon, his sire, iv. 246

Phaëthonis, pertaining to Phaëthon; volucris, the bird of Phaëthon—that is, the swan, into which Cycnus, son of Sthenelus, grieving for the death of Phaëthon, was changed, xii. 581

Phaëthusa, one of the Heliades, sisters of Phaëthou, ii. 316

Phantusos, a son of Sounus, xi.
642

Pharos, a little island near Alexandria in Egypt, ix. 773; xv.
287

Pharsalia, the region about Pharsalus, a city in Thessaly, where Caesar defeated Pompey in 48
B.C., xv. 823

Phasias, an epithet of Medea from the Phasis, a river of her native Colchis, vii. 298

Phasis, a river in Colchis, ii.
249; vii. 6, 298

Phegeus, belonging to Phegeus, king of Psophis in Arcadia; his daughter was Alphesiboea, the first wife of Alcmæon, who left her to marry Callirrhœ, and was slain by the brothers of Alphesiboea; hence the "sword of Phe-geus," in the hands of his sons, is said to have drained his kinsman's (i.e. his son-in-law's) blood, ix. 412

Phegiacus, from the city of Phgeia in Arcadia, ii. 244

Phene, wife of Periphæs, vii. 399

Pheretlades, Admetus, son of Pherephs, king of Pherae in Thessaly, one of the Calydonian hunters, viii. 310

Phile, a nymph in the train of Liana, iii. 172

Philammon, son of Apollo and Chione, celebrated for his gift of song, xi. 317

Philemon and Bauis, a pious old couple in Phrygia who entertaitained Jupiter and Mercury, viii.
618 ff.

Philippos, a city in Macedonia, where Octaviaus and Antony defeated Brutus and Cassius in 42 B.C., xv. 824

Philoctetes, son of Pocae, ix. 233; xiii. 45, 313; a friend of Hercules, set fire to the hero's pyre on Mount Oeta, and received the famous bow and arrows, ix. 233; xiii. 51; on the way to Troy he was bitten by a snake at Lemnos, and by the advice of Ulysses he was abandoned there by the Greeks, XIII. 46, 313 ff.; here he dragged out a wretched existence until in the tenth year of the war, in accordance with an oracle that Troy could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules, Ulysses went to Lemmos and persuaded Philoctetes to join the Greeks at Troy, xiii. 54, 313, 329, 402

Philomela, daughter of Pandion, sister of Procne, imprisoned and outraged by her sister's husband Tereus while on the way from Athens in his company to visit her sister, vi. 440 ff.; manages to send news of her plight to Procne, vi. 572 ff.; rescued by her sister, she plans with her a terrible revenge on Tereus, vi.
601 ff.; pursued by Tereus, she is changed into a nightingale,
vii. 663

Philyra, a nymph, daughter of Oceanna, whom Saturn loved, changing her into a mare and himself into a horse; their son was Chiron, the centaur, ii. 676;
v. 126

483
Philyreus heros, Chiron, son of Philyra, ii. 676; Philyricia tecta — the home of Chiron, vii. 353

Phineus: (1) brother of the Ethiopian king Cepheus, uncle of Andromeda, to whom he had been betrothed before the coming of Persus; with a band of followers he attacks Persus at the wedding feast, and with all his companions is finally repulsed, petrified by the sight of the Gorgon-head, v. 1 ff.; (2) a king of Salmydessus in Thrace, a blind prophet who had received the gift of prophecy from Apollo; he was tormented by the Harpies, who were sent to punish him because of his cruelty towards his sons; when the Argonauts asked instruction from him on their way to Colchis, he promised this if they would deliver him from the Harpies; accordingly the winged sons of Boreas, Zetes and Calais, drove the pests far away to the island of the Strophades, vii. 3

Phlegethon, a river of the lower world, v. 544; xv. 532

Phlegraens, a centaur, xii. 378

Phlegraus, of Phlegra, a region of Macedon, x. 151

Phlegyae, a robber people of Thessaly who destroyed the temple at Delphi, xi. 414

Phlegyas, a companion of Phineus, v. 87

Phobetor, a son of Somnus, xi. 640

Phocis, a country in Greece between Boeotia and Aetolia, i. 313; ii. 569; v. 276; xi. 348

Phoccus, son of Aeacus and the Neried Psamathe, half-brother of Telamon and Peleus, vii. 477, 668, 685, 690: he was accidentally killed by Peleus, xi. 267

Phoebe, a name for Diana, twin sister of Phoebus Apollo, vi. 216; xii. 36: the goddess of the moon, ii. 723; virgin huntress, i. 476; ii. 415; by metonymy for the moon, i. 11. See Diana

Phoebus, a familiar name of Apollo, i. 451, 463; v. 330; vi. 122, 215; xv. 550; especially as the Sun-god, i. 752; ii. 24, 36, 399; hence frequently by metonymy for the sun itself, i. 338; ii. 110; iii. 151; iv. 349, 715; xi. 595; xiv. 416; the oracular god, iii. 8, 10, 18; xiii. 677; xv. 631: Cassandra is called a saint by Phoebi, "the high priestess of Phoebus," because the god had given her the power of prophecy, xiii. 410; Anius is antistota or high priest at Delos, xiii. 632; as god of the harp he contests against the pipes of Pan, xi. 164; god of the bow, viii. 31, 350; xiii. 501; called domesticus, because Augustus in 12 B.C. erected a temple to the god on the Palatine and included him among his penates, xv. 865

Phenissa, Phoenix, of Phoenicia, Phoenician, iii. 46; xv. 288

Phoenix, son of Amyntor of Thessaly, companion of Achilles, present at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 307

Phoenix bird, the story of its birth, life, and death, xv. 393 ff.

Pholus, a centaur, xii. 306

Phorbas: (1) a companion of Phineus, v. 74; (2) leader of the Phlegyae, who plundered the temple of Apollo at Delphi, xi. 414; (3) a centaur, xii. 322

Phorcides, the Graea, daughters of Phorcys, who had but one eye among them, iv. 775

Phorcynis, Medusa as daughter of Phorcys, iv. 743: v. 230
INDEX

Phoroneus, son of Inachus, king of Argos, i. 668; ii. 524
Pierus, a mountain in Thessaly, i. 570; ii. 225; vii. 225; xi. 554
Piraeus, the harbour of Athens, vi. 446
Pirene, a famous spring near Corinth, ii. 240; vii. 391
Pires, belonging to Pirene, a fountain on the citadel of Corinth, sacred to the Muses, ii. 240; vii. 391
Pirithous, son of Ixion, viii. 403, 566, 613; xii. 210; king of the Lapithae in Thessaly, friend of Theseus, viii. 303, 404; xii. 229; was present with his friend at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 404; was in the group entertained by Achelous, viii. 567; his marriage with Hippodamia was the occasion of the great battle of the centaurs (who had been invited to the wedding, and one of whom attempted violence on the bride) and the Lapithae, followers of Pirithous, xii. 210 ff.
Pisa, a city in Elys, v. 409, 494
Piscis, a constellation, the Fish, the twelfth sign of the Zodiac, x. 78; used also collectively in the singular, Piscis, x. 165
Pisces, a constellation, xii. 303
Pitane, a city on the Aeolic coast of Asia Minor, vii. 357
Pitheus, king of Troezen, son of Pelops, grandfather of Theseus, vi. 418; viii. 622; xv. 296, 506 Pleides, the seven daughters of Atlas and the ocean-nymph Pleione; they form a small constellation in the neck of Taurus, and are represented on the shield of Achilles, xiii. 293; their names were Maia, Electra, Taygeta, Halyone, Celaeno, Sterope, and Merope; of these reference is made in the Metamorphoses to two only, Maia (but not by name), the mother by Jupiter of Mercury, i. 670; and Taygeta, iii. 595: Niobe boasts that her mother (Dione) is a sister of the Pleiades, i.e. she is one of the Hyades, vi. 174

Pleione, daughter of Oceanus, wife of Atlas, mother of the Pleiades, ii. 743

Pleuron, a city in Actolia, vii. 382; xiv. 494

 Plexippus, son of Thestius, brother of Althaea, killed by his nephew, Melager, for insulting Atالanta, viii. 440

Poeautiades, Philoctetes, son of Poeas, xiii. 313

Poeantia proles, the same as the preceding, xiii. 45

Poeas, the father of Philoctetes, ix. 233

Polites, a companion of Ulysses, xiv. 251

Polydemon, a companion of Phineus, v. 85

Polydamas, a Trojan, son of Panthoits and friend of Hector, xii. 547

Polydectes, a ruler of Scyia, perished by a look at the Gorgon-head, v. 242

Polydegmon, a companion of Phineus, v. 85

Polydorus, son of Priam and Hecuba; when the Trojan war came on he was sent with a large treasure for safe keeping to Polymestor, but later was murdered by him and his dead body cast out upon the seashore, xiii. 432 ff.; Hecuba thinks of him as her only comfort left after the death of Polyxena, xiii. 580; and immediately thereafter finds his dead body on the shore, xiii. 536; Acneas sails past the scene of his murder, xiii. 629

Polymestor, a king of Thrace, husband of Ione, daughter of Priam; murders Polydorus to gain the treasure consigned with him, xiii. 430; Hecuba, finding out the crime, works terrible vengeance on the murderer, xiii. 540 ff.

Polypemons, father of Sciron, grandfather of Alcyone (neptetn Polyphemis); Sciron pushed his daughter into the sea, charging her with unchastity, and she was changed into a halycon, vii. 401

Polyphemus, one of the Cyclopes, son of Neptune, a race of fabulous one-eyed giants living in Sicily; his wooling of Galatea, xiii. 744 ff.; warned by Telemus that he is destined to lose his eye at the hands of Ulysses, xiii. 771; his encounter with Ulysses' band described by Achaemenid-s, xiv. 167 ff.

Polyxena, daughter of Priam and Hecuba; at the command of the shade of Achilles she was sacrificed upon his tomb, xiii. 448 ff.

Pomona, a beautiful wood-nymph of Latium, devoted to horticulture, wooed by many suitors and won by Vertumnus, xiv. 623 ff.

Pompeius Sextus, the second son of Pompey the Great, conquered in the year 36 B.C., in a sea-fight off Sicily between Mylae and Naulochus, by Agrippa, the admiral of Augustus, xv. 825

Pontus, the Black Sea, hence a kingdom in Asia Minor bordering on that sea, xv. 756

Priamia coniunx, Hecuba. wife of Priam, xiii. 404

486
INDEX

Prlamides, Helenus, son of Priam, xiii. 99, 723; xv. 438; in plural, Prlamidae, the sons of Priam, xiii. 482

Priam, Priam, the son of Laomedon, last king of Troy, xi. 757; husband of Hecuba, by whom he had numerous sons and daughters, notably, as mentioned in the Metamorphoses. Hector, Paris, Helenus, Polydorus, Deiphobus, Cassandra and Polyxena; Aesacus was the son of Priam by Alextroë; Priam, not aware that he has been changed into a bird, mourns his loss, xiii. 1; he would have given Helen back at the demand of Ulysses, but was overborne by the younger party, xiii. 201; on the night of the fall of Troy he was killed by Pyrrhus at the altar of Jupiter in the court of his own palace, xiii. 404

Priapus, god of gardens and vineyards, in which his statues are set as a sort of scarecrow to frighten thieves, xiv. 640; Lotis, in terror of his pursuit, escapes by being changed into a tree, ix. 347

Proca, an Alban king, father of Numitor and Amulius, xiv. 622

Prochyte, an island off the coast of Campania, xiv. 89

Proco, daughter of Pandion, married Terenus under evil omens, vi. 428 ff.; mother of Itys, vi. 437; gets news of her sister’s wrongs and plans a terrible revenge on her husband, vi. 580 ff.; pursued by her husband, she is changed into a swallow, vi. 668

Procris, daughter of Erectheus, king of Athens, vii. 697; sister of Orthynthia, vii. 695; wife of Cephalus, vi. 682; the story of the devoted love of Procris and Cephalus and its tragic end, vii. 694 ff.

Procrustes, a famous robber who compelled all passers-by to lie on a couch to which he fitted them either by cutting off or stretching out their bodies; he was slain by Theseus, vii. 438

Proetides, daughters of Proetus, being punished with madness by Juno for their pride, they imagined themselves to be cows; they were restored to sanity by the soothsayer, Melampus, the son of Amythaon, xv. 326

Proetus, the twin brother of Acrisius, drove the latter from his throne of Argos, but was petrified by a sight of the Gorgon-head in the hands of Perseus, v. 238

Prometheus, the son of Iapetus, represented as making man out of clay, i. 82; father of Deucalion, i. 390

Promethides, Deucalion, son of Prometheus, i. 390

Propoetides, girls of Amathus who denied the divinity of Venus and by her wrath were driven to prostitution and later changed to stones, x. 221, 238

Proreus, one of Acoetes’ sailors, iii. 634

Proserpina, daughter of Ceres and Jupiter, v. 376, 514; carried away by Pluto and made his queen in the lower world, v. 391 ff.; terms of her return to the upper world settled by Jupiter, v. 530; she is to spend her time equally on earth and in Hades, v. 564; she changes Ascalaphus into a screech-owl, v. 544; she is now queen of the lower world, v. 543; x. 46. See Persephone
INDEX

Protesilaus, a Thessalian chief, slain by Hector's spear, the first of the Greeks to fall in the Trojan war, xii. 68

Protesilaus, a Thessalian chief, slain by Hector's spear, the first of the Greeks to fall in the Trojan war, xii. 68

Pythagoras, a famous Greek philosopher of Samos who took up his residence at Crotona in Italy, where Numa came to be his pupil; his philosophy recounted at length, xv. 60 ff.; he claimed to be the reincarnation of Euphorbus, xv. 161

Pythia, the Pythian games, celebrated at Delphi in honour of Apollo every four years in commemoration of his conquest of the Python, i. 447

Python, a huge serpent spontaneously generated from the fresh slime of the earth after the flood, killed by Apollo, i. 438 ff.; gave name to Pythian games, i. 447

Quirinus, the name under which the Romans worshipped the deified Romulus, xiv. 828, 834, 851; xv. 862; the son of Mars, xv. 863; turba and Populus Quirini = the Romans, xiv. 607; xv. 756; collis Quirini = the Quirinal Hill, xiv. 836

Quirites, and collectively Quires, the Cures or Sabines, used commonly = Romans, after the union of the Sabines with the people of Romulus, xiv. 823; xv. 600

Remus, an Alban king, xiv. 616

Rhadamanthus, a son of Jupiter and Europa, brother of Minos; Jupiter grieves that he cannot grant him immortality on earth, ix. 436, 440
Rhamnusia, a name of Nemesis from her temple at Rhamnus in Attica, iii. 406 Rhamnusia — Rhamnusia, xiv. 694
Rhanis, a nymph in the train of Diana, iii. 171
Rhegion, a city in the southern part of Calabria on the Sicilian Strait, xiv. 5, 48
Rhesus, a Thracian king of whom the oracle had said that if his horses should have drunk of the water of the Xanthus Troy could not be taken; Ulysses and Diomedes frustrated this oracle by killing Rhesus and capturing his horses, xiii. 98, 249
Rhexenor, a companion of Diomedes changed by Venus into a bird, xiv. 504
Rhodanus, the Rhone, a river in Gaul, ii. 258
Rhodope, once a man, changed into a mountain in punishment of his impious presumption, vi. 87; mentioned elsewhere as a mountain in Thrace, ii. 222; vi. 589; x. 11, 50, 77
Rhodopeius, an epithet of Orpheus, from Rhodope, a mountain of his native Thrace, x. 11, 50
Rhodos, an island off the southwestern coast of Asia Minor, vii. 365
Rhoeteis, of Rhoeteum, a promontory in the Troad, xi. 197
Rhoetus: (1) a companion of Phineus, v. 33; (2) a centaur, xii. 271, 285
Ripheus, a centaur, xii. 352
Roma, Rome, l. 201; xiv. 800, 809, 840; xv. 431, 637, 654, 736 Romanus, the Roman people, xv. 637, 654; Rome’s greatness prophesied, xv. 444 ff.
Romethinm, a place in Italy, xv. 705
Romuleis, belonging to Romulus; colles, the Quirinal Hill, xiv. 845; urbs — Rome, xv. 625
Romulus, son of Mars, xv. 863; and of Illa (Iliades), xiv. 781, 824; called genitor, father of the Roman people, xv. 862; he fights against the Sabines, xiv. 799; his spear-shaft, fixed in the ground, puts forth leaves and is changed to a tree, xv. 561 ff.; at the instance of Mars he is received into the company of the gods, xiv. 306 ff. See Qurius Rutuli, a people of Latium whose chief city was Ardea and whose hero was Turnus, xiv. 455, 528, 567
SABAEUS, of the Sabeans, a people in Arabia Felix, x. 480
Sabini, the Sabinians, a people of Central Italy, connected with the early history of Rome, xiv. 775, 797, 800, 832; xv. 4
Salamin, a city on the island of Cyprus, founded by Teucer, who came from the island of Salamin, xiv. 760
Saltentins, of the Sallentines, a people of Calabria, xv. 50
Salmaecis, a pool in Caria whose waters were enfeebling, iv. 286; xv. 319; a nymph of the pool who was enamoured of Hermaphroditus, iv. 306 ff.
Samius, an epithet of Pythagoras, a celebrated philosopher of Samos, xv. 60. See Pythagoras Samos: (1) an island off the coast of Asia Minor, famed as the birthplace of Pythagoras, sacred also to Juno, viii. 221; xv. 60, 61; (2) an island in the Ionian Sea under the dominion of Ulysses, xiii. 711
Sardes (Sardis), the ancient capital of Lydia, xi. 137, 152

489
INDEX

Sarpedon, a Lycian chief, son of Jupiter and Europa, killed by Patroclus before Troy; Ulysses boasts that he harried his band, xiii. 255

Saturnia, an epithet of Juno as the daughter of Saturn, i. 612, 616, 722; ii. 455, 531; iii. 271, 293, 333, 365; iv. 448, 464; v. 330; ix. 176; xiv. 782

Saturnius, belonging to Saturn; applied (1) to Jupiter, i. 163; viii. 703; ix. 242; (2) to Pluto, v. 420; (3) to Picus as the son of Saturn, proles Saturnia, xiv. 320

Saturnus, son of Heaven and Earth, ruler of the universe during the Golden Age; he was dethroned by his three sons (Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto, who shared his kingdom by lot among themselves) and sent to Tartara, i. 113; his wife was Ops, his sister, ix. 498; his children by her were the three sons mentioned above, also Juno, Ceres, and Vesta; Chiron, by Philyra, ii. 676; vi. 126; and Picus, xiv. 320

Schoeneia, Atalanta, daughter of Schoeneus, king of Bocotia, x. 609, 660

Sciron, a famous robber on the rocky coast between Megaris and Attica, who threw his victims over high cliffs into the sea; Thesens treated him in the same way; his houses were changed to rocks which bore his name, vii. 444, 447

Scylla: (1) daughter of the nymph Crataeis, xiii. 749; remarkable for her beauty and sought by many suitors, xiii. 734 ff.; wooed by Glaucus, a sea-divinity, xiii. 900 ff.; repulses him, xiii. 967; Glaucus appeals to Circe for aid in his suit, xiv. 18 ff.; Circe offers her own love to Glaucus, but, being repulsed by him, takes revenge by changing Scylla into a frightful monster; she is fixed in place, a woman's form begirt with baying heads of dogs, vii. 65; xiii. 732; xiv. 59 ff.; this monster takes toll of the men of Ulysses, thinking thus to harm Circe, xiv. 70; Scylla was subsequently changed to a dangerous rock in the same place, on the Italian side of the straits of Sicily, opposite Charybdis, xiv. 73; (2) daughter of Nisus of Megara, who for love of Minos, who was besieging her native city, cut off her father's purple lock, on which his safety depended, and gave it to Minos; scorned by him, she was transformed into the bird Ciris, viii. 41 ff.

Scyros: (1) an island north-east of Euboea, xiii. 156; (2) a town in Asia Minor, xiii. 175

Scythia, the country of the Scythians, lying in Northern Europe and Asia beyond the Black Sea, i. 64; ii. 224; v. 649; vii. 407; viii. 788; x. 588; xiv. 331; xv. 285, 360

Semele, daughter of Cadmus, beloved by Jupiter, mother of Bacchus, destroyed by Juno's wiles, iii. 261 ff.

Semelieus, an epithet of Bacchus from his mother, Semele, iii. 520; v. 329; ix. 641

Semiramis, a mythical queen of Babylonia, daughter of Dercetis; was changed at last into a white dove, iv. 47; surrounded Babylon with walls of brick, iv. 58; her husband was Ninus, iv. 88; she was the ancestress of Polyaeanon, v. 85

Seriphoi, an island of the Cyclades, v. 242, 251; vii. 464
INDEX

Serpens, a northern constellation, n. 173. See Argus

Sibylla, the priestess of Apollo at his temple in Cumae; is visited by Aeneas, guides him through the lower world, and tells him the story of Apollo's love and her foolish choice of a gift, xiv. 104 ff.; xv. 712

Sicania, a name for Sicily, v. 464, 495; xiii. 724; xv. 279

Sicelis, Siculus, Sicilian, v. 361, 412; vii. 65; viii. 283; xiii. 770; xiv. 7; xv. 706, 825

Sicyonius, of the city of Sicyon in the Peloponnesus, iii. 216

Sidon, a city in Phoenicia, ii. 840; iii. 129; iv. 643, 572; x. 267; xiv. 80

Sidon, an epithet of Dido as one who came from the Phoenician city of Sidon, xiv. 80

Sidonius, an epithet applied to Cadmus, who came from Phoenicia, iii. 129; to the Theban companions of Ino, because they were derived from Phoenician stock of Cadmus and his companions, iv. 543

Sigeiis, Sigeilis, of Sigeum, a promontory in the Troad, xi. 197; xii. 71; xiii. 3

Silenus, a satyr, the foster-father of Bacchus, iv. 26; kindly entertained by Midas, xi. 90 ff.

Silver Age, described, i. 114 ff.

Silvius, son of Ascanius, king of Alba, xiv. 610

Simois, a river near Troy, xiii. 324

Sius, an Isthmian robber who bound travellers to tree-tops, bent these down, and shot his victims into the air; he was killed by Theseus, vii. 440

Sinuessa, a town in Campania, xv. 715

Siphnos, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 466

Sipylus, one of the seven sons of Niobe, named after a mountain in his mother's native Lydia, vi 149, 231

Sirenes, daughters of Achelous (Acheloides, v. 552), companions of the maiden Proserpina; when she was lost, having searched the land over for her, at their own request they were changed to birds that they might search over the sea also, v. 552 f.; they were exceedingly skilled in song, v. 555; the "rocks of the Sirens" were three small rocky islands off the coast of Campania, from which, by their sweet voices, the Sirens were said to lure passing sailors to their destruction, xiv. 88

Sirinus, of Siris, a town and river in Lucania, xv. 52

Sisyphus, son of Aeolus, xiii. 26; brother of Athamas, iv. 466; he was famous for his cunning and robberies, xiii. 32; for which he was punished in Hades by the endless task of rolling a stone up a hill, which always rolled back again, iv. 460 ff.; x. 44; xiii. 26; he was supposed to have seduced Anticlea, the mother of Ulysses, and to have been himself the father of Ulysses, xiii. 32

Sithon, an otherwise unknown creature, now woman and now man, iv. 280

Sithonius, of the Sithonians, a people of Thrace,—Thracian, vi. 588; xiii. 571

Smilax. See Crocus

Smintheus, an epithet of Apollo, "the mouse-killer," xii. 585

Sol, the Sun-god, son of Hyperion, iv. 192, 241, 245, 257; xv. 30; father of Circe, xiv. 10, 33, 346, 875; of Paephaë, ix. 876; of

491
INDEX

Aectes, vii. 96; this god is frequently confused with Phoebus Apollo, i. 751 ff.; ii. 1 ff., 394
Somnus, the god of Sleep, his house and retinue described, xi. 593 ff.
Sparta, the chief city of Laconia, called also Lacedaemon, iii. 208; vi. 414; x. 170, 217
Sperchios, a river in Thessaly, i. 579; ii. 250; v. 86; vii. 230
Stabiae, a city on the Bay of Naples, xv. 711
Strophades, two small islands in the Ionian Sea, where the Trojans encountered the Harpies, xiii. 709
Strymon, a river in Thrace, ii. 257
Stymphalis, of Stymphalus, a district in Arcadia with a town, mountain, and lake of the same name, the haunt of certain odious birds killed by Hercules, ix. 187
Stymphalus, a centaur, xii. 459
Styx, a river of the world of the dead, used also by metonymy for the lower world and for death itself, i. 139, 189, 737; ii. 46, 101; iii. 76, 272, 290, 504, 695; iv. 434, 437; v. 504; vi. 662; x. 13, 313, 697; xi. 500; xii. 322; xiv. 155, 591; xv. 154, 791
Surrentinus, of Surrentum, a town on the Bay of Naples, xv. 710
Sybaris, a town and river in Italy near Tarentum, xv. 51, 315
Sycintes, the Inhabitants of Syene in Upper Egypt, v. 74
Syamaethis, a daughter of the river-god Symaethus in Sicily, mother of Acis, xiii. 750
Symaethius, of Symaethus, a town in Sicily, xiii. 879 Symphlegades, two rocky islands in the Euxine Sea, which, according to fable, clashed together whenever any object passed between them, vii. 62; xv. 388
Syrinx, a nymph of Arcadia, beloved and pursued by Pan, i. 689 ff.; changed to a growth of reeds, i. 705; Pan constructs a musical instrument out of these reeds, called either the "pipes of Pan" or the Syrinx, i. 711
Syros, an island of the Cyclades, vii. 464
Syrtis, a dangerous sandbank on the northern coast of Africa, viii. 120

TAENARIDES, belonging to Taenarum, the southernmost point of Laconia; used by metonymy for Laconian, an epithet of Hyacinthus, x. 183
Tages, an Etruscan deity, grandson of Jupiter; he sprang from a clod into human form, and was the god who taught the Etruscans the art of divination, xv. 558
Tagus, a gold-bearing river in Spain, ii. 251
Tamasenus, of Tamasus, a city in Cyprus, x. 644
Tanais, the god of the river of that name in Scythia, ii. 242
Tantailides, Agamemnon as the great-grandson of Tantalus, xii. 626 Tantalus, Niobe as daughter of Tantalus, vi. 211
Tantalus: (1) king of Phrygia, son of Jupiter, father of Pelops and Niobe, vi. 172; he was admitted to the table of the gods, vi. 173; because of the trick he played upon them (see Pelops), he was punished in Hades with thirst, standing up to his chin in water which constantly eluded his efforts to drink, iv. 458; x. 41; (2) one of the seven sons of Niobe, vi. 240
INDEX

Tarentum, a city in Lower Italy founded by a colony of Lacedaemonians, xv. 50

Tartarea, a Roman maid who treacherously opened the citadel to the Sabinus and was killed beneath the weight of their arms which they threw upon her, xiv. 776; the Tartarea arcus was the Capitoline Hill, on which stood a temple of Jupiter, xv. 866

Tartarus, and plural, Tartara, a name for the infernal regions, i. 113; II. 260; v. 371, 423; vi. 676; XI. 670; XII. 257, 523, 619

Tartessio, of Tartessus, an old Phoenician colony in Spain, xiv. 416

Tatius, a king of the Sabinus who fought against Romulus, but afterwards made peace and reigned jointly with him, xiv. 775, 804, 805

Taurus, a mountain in Asia Minor, II. 217

Taýgete, a daughter of Atlas, one of the Pleiades, III. 595

Tectaphus, one of the Lapithae, XII. 433

Terean — Arcadian, from Tegea, an ancient town in Arcadia; an epithet of Atalanta (1), VIII. 317, 380

Telamon, son of Aeacus, king of Aegina, XIII. 25; grandson of Jupiter, XIII. 28; brother of Peleus and Phocus, VII. 476, 669; XIII. 151; father of Ajax, XII. 524; XIII. 22, 346; was present at the Calydonian boar-hunt, VIII. 300, 378; took part in the Argonautic expedition, XIII. 24; aided Hercules in taking Troy, XIII. 23; whereby he gained Hesione as his wife, XI. 216; he was banished with Peleus from his father's house for the accidental killing of their half-brother Phocus, XIII. 145. See Peleus

Telamoniades and Telamonius, epithets of Ajax as the son of Telamon, XIII. 194, 231, 266, 321

Telchines, a fabled family of priests in Ialyus, an ancient city of Rhodes, who by the glance of their eyes could change things into ugly shapes; Jupiter plunged them into the sea, VII. 365

Telephus, a centaur, XII. 441

Telemus, son of Eurymus, a seer, XIII. 770

Telephus, a king of Mysia, son of Hercules and the nymph Auge; he was wounded at Troy by the spear of Achilles and afterwards healed by that hero, who rubbed rust from the spear upon the wound, XIII. 171; XII. 112

Telestes, a Cretan, father of Iaithue, IX. 717

Telethusa, wife of Lygdus, mother of Iphis, IX. 682, 696, 766

Tellus, the personification of the earth, the Earth-goddess, II. 272, 301; VII. 196. See Terra

Temese, a town in Bruttium, rich in copper mines, VII. 207; XV. 707

Tempe, the beautiful and famous valley of the Peneus in Thessaly, between Olympus and Ossa, I. 569; VII. 222, 371

Tenedos, a small island near Troy, I. 516; XII. 109; XIII. 174

Tenos, an island of the Cyclades, VII. 469

Terens, king of Thrace, relieved Pandion, king of Athens, from siege and received his daughter, Proene, in marriage, VI. 424 ff.; at his wife's request goes to Athens that he may bring Philomela back with him to visit her sister, VI. 440 ff.; is entrusted by Pandion with the care of Philomela, whom on the journey homeward he ravishes and shuts up in a house in the deep woods, vi. 520 ff.; the two wronged women take vengeance upon him by murdering his son, Itys, and serving him up as a feast to the unawiting father, vi. 647 ff.; he pursues them and both he and they are changed into birds, vi. 671 ff.

493
INDEX

Terra, the Earth-goddess, mother of the Giants, i. 157. See Tellus. Tethys, a sea-goddess, sister and wife of Oceanus, ii. 69, 156, 509; ix. 499; xiii. 951; changes AESacus into a diving-bird, xi. 784 ff.
Teucer: (1) one of the most ancient kings of Troy, who came originally from Crete; from him the people were called Tenerians, xiii. 705; (2) the son of Telamon and Heslone, half-brother of Ajax; though the cousin of Achilles, he does not claim that hero's arms, xiii. 157; he is represented as the ancestor of Anaxarete of Cyprus, xiv. 698.

Teucri, a name of the Trojans from Teucer, their ancient king; xiii. 705, 728; — Trojan, xiv. 72.
Thaumantias, Thaumantias, and Thaumantis, epithets referring to Iris, the daughter of Thaumas, iv. 480; xi. 647; xiv. 485.
Thaumas: (1) the father of Iris, see above; (2) a centaur, xii. 303.

Thebes: (1) the capital city of Bocotia, founded by Cadmus, ruled over by Amphion, Oedipus, and Pentheus, the scene of numerous stories in myth and legend, iii. 131, 549, 553; iv. 416; v. 253; vi. 163; vii. 761; ix. 403; xiii. 685, 692; xv. 427, 429; (2) a city in Mysia, xii. 110; xiii. 173.

Thebaldes, the women of Thebes, vi. 163.

Themis, the daughter of Heaven and Earth, goddess of Justice; has also oracular power; Deucalion consults her oracle after the flood has subsided, i. 321, 379; warns Atlas that a son of Jupiter will despoil him of his golden tree, iv. 643; checks the vow of Hebe that she would grant the gift of youth to no one after Ioalix, ix. 403, 418.

Thereus, a centaur, xii. 353.

Thermodon, a river of Pontus on which lived the Amazons, ii. 249; ix. 189; xii. 611.

Therses, a guest of Anius, xiii. 682.

Thersites, a mean fellow among the Greeks before Troy who loved to abuse the Greek chiefs; he was chastised by Ulysses, xiii. 233.

Thescelus, a companion of Phineus, v. 182.

Theseus, a companion of Phineus, x. 492.

Theseus, son of Aegaeus, king of Athens, xv. 856; called thence Aegides, viii. 174, 405; according to another story he was the son of Neptune, hence Neptunius heros, ix. 1; his mother, with whom he spent his boyhood, was Aethra, daughter of Pitthen, king of Troezen; when grown to manhood he made his way to Athens to his father; on this journey he slew a number of murderous robber giants who infested the road, vii. 433 ff.; he came to Athens unknown to his father; Medea, whom Aegaeus had lately married, sought to poison Theseus, but his father, recognizing him at the critical moment, drove Medea away, vii. 404 ff.; flinging Aegeus paying by compulsion of Minos a tribute of youths and maidens to feed the Minotaur, he joined this band at the next levy, sailed to Crete, slew the Minotaur, and by the aid of Ariadne found his way out of the labyrinth, fled from Crete with her to Dia, where he deserted her, viii. 170 ff.; he now returns to Athens, where he is joyfully received, viii. 263; goes to the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 270 ff.; on his return to Athens he is entertained by the river-god, Achelous, viii. 547 ff.; as a fast friend of Pirithous, he takes a prominent part in the battle of the Lapithae against the centaurs, xii. 227; he had a son, Hippolytus, by Hippolyte, the Amazon; for this son, now grown to young manhood, Phaedra, a second wife of Theseus, conceived a passion; repulsed by the young man, she accused him to his father of attempting violence upon her; Theseus prayed to his father Neptune, who sent a monster from the sea to destroy Hippolytus, xv. 497 ff.

See Cecropides

Thesphades, a name given to the Muses from Thespiae, a city near their favourite haunt on Helicon, v. 310

Thessalis, Thessalus, of Thessaly, a country in the north-eastern part of Greece, vii. 222; viii. 768; xii. 190

Thestiadae, the two sons of Theseus, Toxens and Plexippus, brothers of Althaea, whom Meleager slew at the close of the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 304, 434 ff.

Thesstias, Althaea, daughter of Theseus, mother of Meleager, viii. 452, 473

Thestorlides, Calchas, the son of Theseus, xii. 19, 27

Thetis, a sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus and Doris, xi. 221, 226; xii. 93; wife of Peleus, xi. 217, 400; story of Peleus' wooing, xi. 221 ff.; she prays the nymph Psamathe to put away her wrath against Peleus, xi. 400; she is the mother of Achilles; foreseeing his death in the Trojan war, she disguises him as a girl and hides him at the court of King Lycomedes at Scyros, xiii. 162; obtains from Vulcan a wonderful suit of armour for her son, xiii. 288

Thisbaeus, of Thisbe, a town in Boeotia, in a region famous for its doves, xi. 300

Thisbe, a beautiful Babylonian maiden loved by Pyramus, iv. 55 ff.

Thoactes, armour-bearer of Cepheus, v. 147

Thoas, king of Lemnos, father of Hypsipyle, xiii. 399

Thoön, a Trojan, xiii. 259

Thracia, with the adjectives, Phraeacius, Thrax, Thriecius, a country north-east of Macedonia, v. 276; vi. 87, 424, 435, 661, 682; ix. 194; x. 83; xi. 2, 92; xiii. 436, 439, 537, 565, 628

Thurinus, of Thurii, a city on the Tarentine Gulf, xv. 52

Thybris, a Greek and poetic form of the name Tiber, xiv. 427, 448; xv. 432, 624

Thyestae mensae, "Thyestean banquet," such as that which Thyestes consumed; Atreus, his brother, served up Thyestes' own sons to him as a horrid revenge for his own wrongs, xv. 462
INDEX

Thynæus, of the Thyni, a Thracian people who emigrated to Bithynia, — Bithynian. viii. 719

Thyonius: (1) an epithet of Bacchus from Thyone, the name under which his mother, Semele, was worshipped, iv. 13; (2) a son of Bacchus; the god, in order to conceal his son's theft of a bullock, changed the latter into a stag and his son into the form of a hunter, vii. 359

Tiberinus, an Alban king, xiv. 614; of the Tiber, xv. 728

Tiresias, a Theban who spent seven years in the form of a womau, iii. 324 ff.; he decides a dispute between Jupiter and Juno in favour of the former and is stricken with blindness by Juno, iii. 332; is given power of prophecy by Jupiter, iii. 336; foretells fate of her son, Narcissus, to Liriope, iii. 346; his fame increased by tragic fate of Narcissus, iii. 511; warns Penelope of his impending doom, iii. 516

Tirynthius, from Tiryns, a city in Argolis, an epithet commonly applied to Hercules, vii. 410; ix. 66, 268; xii. 564; xiii. 401; Tirynthia, Alcmena, the mother of Hercules, vi. 112

Tisiphone, one of the Furies, iv. 474; at the request of Juno she drives Athamas mad, iv. 481

Titan, the Titans were the children of Uranos and Gaia (Heaven and Earth), among whom the following are mentioned in the Metamorphoses: Coeus, Hyperion, Iapetus, Oceanus, Saturnus, Mnemosyne, Tethys, Themis; the name Titan is most frequently applied to Sol, the Sun-god, son of Hyperion, i. 10; vi. 438; x. 79, 174; xi. 257; also to Phoebus in his manifestation as the Sun-god, ii. 118

Tithonia and Titanis, a female descendant of a Titan, an epithet applied to Latona as the daughter of Coeus, vi. 185, 346; to Diana as granddaughter of Coeus, iii. 173; to Pyrrha as granddaughter of Iapetus, i. 395; to Circe as daughter of the Sun-god, xiii. 968; xiv. 14, 376, 382, 438

Tithonus, son of Laomedon, husband of Aurora, father of Memnon; his wife had gained eternal life for him, but not eternal youth, ix. 421

Tityos, a giant, suffering in Hades for attempted violence on Latona; a vulture feeds on his liver, which is ever renewed for his suffering, iv. 457; x. 43

Tlepolemus, a son of Hercules, leader of the Rhodians, chides Nestor for omitting Hercules' part in the battle against the centaurs, xii. 537, 574

Timolus, and Timolus, a mountain in Lydia, ii. 217; vi. 15; xi. 86, 152; the god of the mountain, made judge of a contest in music between Pan and Apollo, xi. 156 ff.

Tonans, an epithet of Jupiter, "the Thunderer," i. 170; ii. 466; xi. 198

Toxeus, son of Thestius, killed by his nephew, Meleager, viii. 441

Trachas, a town in Latium, xv. 717

Trachin, a city in Thessaly, x. 269, 282, 502, 627

Trachinius, an epithet of Ceyx, king of Trachin, xi. 282

Trice, a town in Thessaly, vii. 223

Tridentifer, an epithet of Neptune, viii. 596
INDEX

Trinacria and Trinacris, an old Greek name for Sicily, v. 347, 476
Triones, the constellation of the Wall, the Great and Little Bears, which were compared to a wagon with oxen yoked to it; lying far to the north, hence "cold," ii. 171; the Bears are forbidden by Oceanus, at Juno's request, to dip beneath his waters, ii. 172, 528; x. 446. See Callisto Trioëis, Mestra, the daughter of Eryschthon, granddaughter of Triopas, king of Thessaly, viii. 872 Trioëis, Eryschthon, son of Triopas, viii. 751
Triptolemus, son of Celenus, king of Eleusin in Attika, sent over the world by Ceres in her chariot to disseminate seeds and the knowledge of agriculture, v. 616; attacked by Lynucus, v. 653
Triton, a sea-god, half man, half fish, son of Neptune, at whose bidding he blows on his shell to calm or rouse the sea, i. 333; ii. 8; xiii. 919
Tritionia, an epithet of Minerva, from Lake Triton in Africa, near which she is said first to have revealed herself, ii. 783; v. 250, 270; vi. 1
Tritioniaea harundo, "Minerva's reed"; she is said to have invented the flute, vi. 384
Tritonis = Tritonia, ii. 794; v. 645; viii. 548
Trivia, an epithet of Diana because she was worshipped where three roads meet, ii. 416. See Hecate Troezen, a city in Argolis, vi. 418; viii. 566; xv. 296, 506
Troezenius heros, Lelex, an inhabitant of Troezen, viii. 567
Troia, Troy, the famous city of the Troad, xi. 199, 208, 215, 757; xiii. 169, 197, 226, 325, 420, 426, 429, 500, 577, 623, 655, 721; xv. 424, 440, 442; Troas, a Trojan woman, xiii. 421 566; Troës, the Trojans, xii. 67; xiii. 269, 274, 343, 375, 572; xiv. 245
Troyus, Trojan, viii. 365; xiii. 23, 54, 336, 702; xiv. 140; xv. 437
Troicus, belonging to or from Troy, xii. 604; an epithet of the goddess Vesta as derived from Troy, xv. 730
Troïus, an epithet of Aesacus, son of Priam, xi. 773; of Aeneas, xiv. 156
Tyrnus, a king of the Rutuli in Italy, who opposes the peaceful entrance of Aeneas into Latinum, for he himself has been promised the daughter of Latius, who is now offered to the stranger, xiv. 451; sends ambassadors to Diomede asking for aid, xiv. 457 ff.; attempts to burn the ships of Aeneas, xiv. 530 ff.; he falls at last in a duel with Aeneas, and his city of Ardea is burnt to the ground, xiv. 573
Tuscus, Tuscan or Etrurian, belonging to Etruria, a country on the north-western coast of Italy, xiv. 223, 615; Tyrhenian, because Etruria was said to have been settled by that Pelasgian race, iii. 624
Tydides, Diomed, son of Tydeus, xii. 622; xiii. 68
Tymnariidæ, Castor and Pollux, twin sons of Leda and of the Spartan king Tyndarœus, present at the Calydonian boar-hunt, viii. 301, 372; later they were counted the sons of Jupiter, and given a place in the heavens, caelestia sidera, viii. 372

497
INDEX

Tyndaris, an epithet of Helen as the daughter of Tyndareus, xv. 233

Typhoeus, one of the Giants, sons of Earth, who put the heavenly gods to flight, v. 321 ff.; struck with lightning by Jupiter and buried under Sicily, iii. 303; v. 348, 353

Tyria paene, an epithet of Europa, iii. 258

Tyros, a city in Phoenicia, iii. 539; xv. 288; Tyrius = Tyrian or Phoenician. ii. 845; iii. 35, 258; v. 51, 390; vi. 61, 222; ix. 340; x. 211; xi. 166

Tyrrhenia, the country of the Tyrrhenians, Etruria, xiv. 452; Tyrrhenus, of or belonging to the Tyrrhenians, a Pelasgian people who migrated to Italy and formed the parent stock of the Etrurians, iii. 396, 576; iv. 23, 663; xiv. 8; xv. 553, 576

Ulixes, Ulysses, son of Laërtes, xii. 625; xiii. 48; by scanda- lous report, son of Sisyphus, xiii. 31; great-grandson of Mercury on the side of his mother, Anticlea, daughter of Autolycon, son of Mercury, xiii. 146; great-grandson also of Jupiter on the side of his father, Laërtes, the son of Arceus, the son of Jupiter, xiii. 143; he is king of Ithaca and the neighbouring small islands, hence called Ithacus, xiii. 98, 103; he is distinguished among the Greeks for his craft, resourcefulness, eloquence, and boldness, xiii. 92, 712; xiv. 159, 671; in order to avoid going to the Trojan war, he feigned to be mad by plowing on the seashore, but Palamedes uncovered the trick by laying Ulysses' little son, Telemachus, in front of the oxen, xiii. 36 ff.; Ulysses afterwards took vengeance on Palamedes for this act, xiii. 38, 56; he was saved on the battle- field by Ajax, xiii. 71 ff.; he defends his claim to the armour of Achilles, xiii. 124 ff.; it was he who discovered Achilles hiding on Scyros at the court of Lycomedes and brought him to the war, xiii. 162 ff.; and he is therefore entitled to credit for all that Achilles has done at Troy, xiii. 171 ff.; he persuaded Agamemnon to sacrifice Iphigeneia at Aulis, xiii. 181; and tricked Clytemnestra into giving her up, xiii. 193; in company with Menelaus he went to Troy before war was declared to protest against the theft of Helen by Paris and to demand her return, xiii. 196; he was actively engaged in the aid of the Greeks in every way during the long siege, xiii. 211 ff.; he chastised Thersites, xiii. 233; he rescued the dead body of Achilles from the enemy, xiii. 280 ff.; defends himself against the charge of shrinking from the Trojan war: his wife, Penelope, restrained him, just as Achilles' divine mother had kept him back, xiii. 296 ff.; it was not he alone who had decided the fate of Palamedes, xiii. 308; he alone was not to blame that Philoctetes was left on Lemnos, xiii. 313; he afterwards went to Lemnos and persuaded Philoctetes to bring the bow and arrows of Hercules to the Trojan war, xiii. 399; he receives the award of the armour of Achilles, xiii. 382; according to prophecy of Telemus, he was destined to put out the eye of Polyphemus, xiii. 772; his actual experience with the Cyclops, xiv. 159 ff.; he had received from Aeolus the winds tied in a bag, which his sailors, thinking it a treasure, had opened, xiv. 225 ff.; his adventures on the island of Circe, xiv. 248 ff.; a slight reference to the many suitors who beset Penelope during his long absence, xiv. 671
INDEX

Urania, one of the nine Muses, afterwards called the Muse of Astronomy, v. 260

VENILIA, wife of Janus, mother of Canens, xiv. 334

Venulus, a messenger sent by Turnus to Diomed, xiv. 457, 512

Venus, daughter of Jupiter and Dione, xiv. 585; xv. 807; according to another story she is Aphrodite, "sprung from the foam of the sea," iv. 537; she is called Cytherea, since near the island of Cythera she rose from the sea, x. 640, 717; xiv. 487; xv. 803; see also iv. 190, 288; she is Erycina from Monut Eryx in Sicily, where she had a temple, v. 363; she is the goddess of love and charm, x. 230, 277; xiv. 478; xv. 762; and of marriage, ix. 796; x. 295; her husband is Vulcan, iv. 173; she is the mother of Cupid (according to one account, by Mars), i. 463; v. 364; ix. 482; of Harmonia by Mars, iii. 132; iv. 531; of Aeneas by Anchises, xiii. 625, 674; xiv. 572, 584, 588; she gains deification for Aeneas, xiv. 585 ff.; she saves him from Diomed in battle, xv. 806; as she also saved Paris from Menelaüs, xv. 805; for Aeneas’ sake she favours and watches over the Trojans, xiv. 572; and the Romans as their descendants, xiv. 783; and especially does she care for Julius Caesar as the descendant of Anchises, xv. 762; and gains for him a place among the gods, xv. 779 ff.; she attempts to gain immortality for Anchises, ix. 424; she loves the beautiful boy Adonis, x. 524 ff.; mourns over his death, x. 717 ff.; changes him to the anemone flower, x. 735; her amour with Mars, disclosed by Phoebus and exposed by Vulcan, iv. 171 ff.; xiv. 27; took refuge from the pursuit of the Giants in the form of a fish, v. 331; appeals to Cupid to make Pluto love Proserpina, v. 363 ff.; changes Pygmalion’s ivory statue into a living maid, x. 270 ff.; aids Hippomenes in his race with Atalanta, x. 640 ff.; transforms the Propoetides and the Ceraustae, x. 230, 238; wounded by Diomed in battle before Troy, xiv. 477; xv. 769; in memory of which she takes vengeance on Diomed and his companions, xiv. 478, 493; her chief seats of worship, x. 529 ff.; she is represented as drawn in a chariot by doves or swans, x. 718; xiii. 674; xiv. 597; xv. 386; Venus, used by metonymy for love, iii. 294, 323; iv. 258; vi. 460; ix. 141, 553, 639, 728, 739; x. 80, 324, 434; xi. 306; xii. 198; xiii. 875; xiv. 141, 380

Vertumnus, an old Italian deity, god of the changing seasons and their productions: the story of his wooing of Pomona, xiv. 642 ff.

Vesta, daughter of Saturn, goddess of the hearth and of the household in general, called Trojan because her worship and her sacred fire were brought from Troy to Rome, xv. 731; her fires in danger of extinguishment by Caesar’s blood, xv. 778; held as especially sacred among Caesar’s household gods, xv. 864, 865 Virbius, the name of Hippolytus in Italy after he had been changed into a deity, xv. 544
Volturnus, a river in Campania, xv. 715
Vulcan, son of Juno, Iunonigena, iv. 173; his favourite haunt is Lemnos, ii. 757; iv. 185; xiii. 313; he is the god of fire, the blacksmith god, very skilful in working in metals, ii. 5, 106; iv. 175; xii. 614; xiii 289; he is the father of Erichthonius, ii. 757; ix. 424; and of Periphetes Vulani proles, vii. 437; he is the husband of Venus, and cleverly catches her and Mars in an amour, iv. 173 ff. See Mulciber Xanthus, a river on the Trojan plain, ii. 245; ix. 646
Zancle, an older name for the city of Messana in Sicily, xiii. 729; xiv. 5, 47; xv. 290
Zephyrus, the west wind, i. 64, 108; xiii. 726; xv. 700
Zetes, one of the winged sons of Boreas and Orithyia; joined the Argonauts, vi. 716; with his brother Calais drove the Harpies away from the blind old Thracian king, Phineus. vii. 3
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED

LATIN AUTHORS

Ammianus Marcellinus. J. C. Rolfe. 3 Vols. (2nd Imp. revised.)

Apuleius: The Golden Ass (Metamorphoses). W. Adlington (1566). Revised by S. Gaselee. (7th Imp.)

St. Augustine, Select Letters. J. H. Baxter. (2nd Imp.)

Austrolius. H. G. Evelyn White. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)

Bede. J. E. King. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)

Caesar: Civil Wars. A. G. Peskett. (5th Imp.)

Caesar: Gallic War. H. J. Edwards. (10th Imp.)

Cato and Varro: De Re Rustica. H. B. Ash and W. D. Hopper. (3rd Imp.)

Catullus. F. W. Cornish; Tibullus. J. B. Postgate; and Pervigilium Veneris. J. W. Mackail. (13th Imp.)

[Cicero]: Ad Herennium. H. Caplan.

Cicero: Brutus and Orator. G. L. Hendrickson and H. M. Hubbell. (3rd Imp.)

Cicero: De Fato; Paradoxa Stoicorum; Partitiones Oratoriae. H. Rackham. (With De Oratore, Vol. II.) (2nd Imp.)

Cicero: De Finibus. H. Rackman. (4th Imp. revised.)

Cicero: De Inventione, etc. H. M. Hubbell.
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

Cicero: De Natura Deorum and Academica. H. Rackham. (2nd Imp.)
Cicero: De Officiis. Walter Miller. (7th Imp.)
Cicero: De Oratore. E. W. Sutton and H. Rackham. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
Cicero: De Republica and De Legibus, including Somnium Scipionis. Clinton W. Keyes. (4th Imp.)
Cicero: De Senectute, De Amicitia, De Divinatio. W. A. Falconer. (6th Imp.)
Cicero: In Catilinam, Pro Murena, Pro Sulla, Pro Flacco. Louis E. Lord. (3rd Imp. revised.)
Cicero: Philippics. W. C. A. Ker. (3rd Imp.)
Cicero: Pro Caecina, Pro Lege Manilia, Pro Cluentio, Pro Rabirio. H. Grose Hodge. (3rd Imp.)
Cicero: Pro Quinctio, Pro Roscio Amerino, Pro Roscio Comoedo, Contra Rullum. J. H. Freese. (3rd Imp.)
Cicero: Tusculan Disputations. J. E. King. (4th Imp.)
Claudian. M. Platnauer. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
Columella: De Re Rustica. H. B. Ash, E. S. Forster and E. Heffner. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 2nd Imp.)
Florus. E. S. Forster; and Cornelius Nepos. J. C. Rolfe. (2nd Imp.) Frontinus: Stratagems and Aqueducts. C. E. Bennett and M. B. McElwain. (2nd Imp.) Fronto: Correspondence. C. R. Haines. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 3rd Imp., Vol. II 2nd Imp.)
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

Horace: Odes and Epodes. C. E. Bennett. (14th Imp. revised.) Horace: Satires, Epistles, Ars Poetica. H. R. Fairclough. (9th Imp. revised.)
Jerome: Select Letters. F. A. Wright. (2nd Imp.)
Juvenal and Persius. G. G. Ramsay. (7th Imp.)
Lucan. J. D. Duff. (3rd Imp.)
Lucretius. W. H. D. Rouse. (7th Imp. revised.)
Minor Latin Poets: from Publilius Syrus to Rutilius Namatianus, including Grattius, Calpurnius Siculus, Nemesianus, Avianus, with “Aetna”, “Phoenix” and other poems. J. Wight Duff and Arnold M. Duff. (3rd Imp.)
Ovid: The Art of Love and other Poems. J. H. Mozley. (3rd Imp.)
Ovid: Fasti. Sir James G. Frazer. (2nd Imp.)
Ovid: Heroides and Amores. Grant Showerman. (5th Imp.)
Ovid: Metamorphoses. F. J. Miller. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 10th Imp., Vol. II 8th Imp.)
Ovid: Tristia and Ex Ponto. A. L. Wheeler. (3rd Imp.) Petronius. M. Heseltine; Seneca: Apocolocyntosis. W. H. D. Rouse. (9th Imp. revised.) Propertius. H. E. Butler. (6th Imp.)
Quintilian. H. E. Butler. 4 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
Sallust. J. C. Rolfe. (4th Imp. revised.) Silius Italicus. J. D. Duff. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 2nd Imp., Vol. II 3rd Imp.) Statius. J. H. Mozley. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
Tacitus: Dialogus. Sir Wm. Peterson; and Agricola and Germania. Maurice Hutton. (6th Imp.)
Terence. John Sargeaunt. 2 Vols. (7th Imp.)
Tertullian: Apologia and De Spectaculis. T. R. Glover; Minucius Felix. G. H. Rendall. (2nd Imp.) Valerius Flaccus. J. H. Mozley. (2nd Imp. revised.) Varro: De Lingua Latina. R. G. Kent. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp. revised.) Velleius Paterculus and Res Gestae Divi Augusti. F. W. Shipley. (2nd Imp.)
Virgil. H. R. Fairclough. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 19th Imp., Vol. II 14th Imp. revised.)

GREEK AUTHORS

Achilles Tatius. S. Gaselee. (2nd Imp.)
Aeneas Tacticus, Asclepiodotus and Onasander. The Illinois Greek Club. (2nd Imp.) Aeschines. C. D. Adams. (2nd Imp.)
Aeschylus. H. Weir Smyth. 2 Vols. (6th Imp.)
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

ANDOCIDES, ANTIPHON. Cf. MINOR ATTIC ORATORS.

APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. R. C. Seaton. (5th Imp.)

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Kirsoff Lake. 2 Vols. (1 8th Imp., II 6th Imp.)

ARATUS. Cf. CALLIMACHUS.

ARISTOPHANES. Benjamin Bickley Rogers. 3 Vols. (5th Imp.) Verse trans.

ARISTOTLE: ART OF RHETORIC. J. H. Freese. (3rd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: AETENIAN CONSTITUTION, Eudemian ETHICS.

VIRTUES AND VICES. H. Rackham. (3rd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: GENERATION OF ANIMALS. A. L. Peck. (2nd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: METEOROLOGICA. H. D. P. Lee

ARISTOTLE: NICOMACHEAN ETHICS. H. Rackham. (6th Imp. revised.)

ARISTOTLE: OECONOMICA AND MAGNA MORALIA. G. C. Armstrong. (With Metaphysics, Vol. II.) (3rd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: ON THE HEAVENS. W. K. C. Guthrie. (3rd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: ORGANON. CATEGORIES: On Interpretation, Prior Analytics. H. P. Cooke and H. Fredennick. (3rd Imp.)

ARISTOTLE: ORGANON. On Sophistical Refutations. On Coming to be and Passing Away, On the Cosmos. E. S. Forster and D. J. Furley.

ARISTOTLE: PARTS OF ANIMALS. A. L. Peck; MOTION AND PROGRESSION OF ANIMALS. E. S. Forster. (3rd Imp.)

Demetrius on Style. W. Rhys Roberts. (5th Imp. revised.) Aristotle: Politics. H. Rackham. (4th Imp.)
Aristotle: Politics. H. Rackham. (4th/5th Imp.)
St. Basil: Letters. R. J. Deferrari. 4 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
Callimachus. Hymns and Epigrams, and Lykophron. A. W. Mair; Aratus. G. R. Mair. (2nd Imp.)
Clement of Alexandria. Rev. G. W. Butterworth. (3rd Imp.)
Demosthenes I: Olynthiacs, Philippics and Minor Orations: I-XVII and XX. J. H. Vince. (2nd Imp.) Demosthenes II: De Corona and De Falsa Legatione. C. A. Vince and J. H. Vince. (3rd Imp. revised.) Demosthenes IV-VI: Private Orations and In Neaeram. A. T. Murray. (2nd Imp.) Dio Cassius: Roman History. E. Cary. 9 Vols. (Vols I & II 3rd Imp., Vols. III-IX 2nd Imp.)
Dionysius of Halicarnassus: Roman Antiquities. Spelman’s translation revised by E. Cary. 7 Vols. (Vols. I-V 2nd Imp.)
GALEN: ON THE NATURAL FACULTIES. A. J. Brock. (4th Imp.)
THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY. W. R. Paton. 5 Vols. (Vols. I & II 5th Imp., III 4th Imp., IV & V 3rd Imp.)
THE GREEK BUCOLIC POETS’ (THEOCRITUS, BION, MOSCHUS). J. M. Edmonds. (7th Imp. revised.)
GREEK ELEGY AND IAMBUS WITH THE ANACREONTEA. J. M. Edmonds. 2 Vols. (Vol I 3rd Imp., II 2nd Imp.)
GREEK MATHEMATICAL WORKS. IVOR Thomas. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.) HERODES. Cf. THEOPHRASTUS: CHARACTERS.
HESIOD AND THE HOMERIC HYMNS. H. G. Evelyn White. (7th Imp. revised and enlarged.) HIPPOCRATES AND THE FRAGMENTS OF HERACLEITUS. W. H. S. Jones and E. T. Withington. 4 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
HOMER: ODYSSEY. A. T. Murray. 2 Vols. (8th Imp.) ISAIAUS. E. S. Forster. (3rd Imp.)
ISOCRATES. George Norlin and LaRue Van Hook. 3 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
ST. JOHN DAMASCENE: BARLAAM AND IOASAPH. Rev. G. R. Woodward and Harold Mattingly. (3rd Imp. revised.)
JULIAN. Wilmer Cave Wright. 3 Vols. (Vols I & II 3rd Imp., Vol. III 2nd Imp.)
LONGUS: DAPHNIS AND CHLOE. Thornley’s translation revised by J. M. Edmonds; and PARTHENIUS. S. Gaselee. (4th Imp.) LUCIAN. A. M. Harmon. 8 Vols. (Vols I-V. (Vols I & II 4th Imp., III, 3rd Imp., IV & V 2nd Imp.) LYCOPHRON. Cf. CALLIMACHUS.
LYRA GRAECA. J. M. Edmonds. 3 Vols. (Vol. I 4th Imp.,
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

Vol. II 3rd Ed. revised and enlarged, Vol. III 3rd Imp. revised.)
LYSIAS. W. R. M. Lamb. (3rd Imp.)
MANETHO. W. G. Waddell; PTOLEMY: TETRABIBLOS. F. E. Robbins. (3rd Imp.)
MARCUS AURELIUS. C. R. Haines. (4th Imp. revised.) MENANDER. F. G. Allinson. (3rd Imp. revised.) NONNOS: DIONYSIACA. W. H. D. Rouse. 3 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
OPPION, COLLUTHUS, TRYPHIODORUS. A. W. Mair. (2nd Imp.) PARTHENIUS. Cf. LONGUS.
PHILOSTRATUS: IMAGINES; CALLISTRATUS: DESCRIPTIONS. A. Fairbanks.
PHILOSTRATUS AND EUNAPIUS: LIVES OF THE SOPHISTS. Wilmer Cave Wright. (2nd Imp.)
PINDAR. Sir J. E. Sandys. (7th Imp. revised.)
PLATO I: EUTHYPHRo, APOLOGY, CRITO, PHAEDo, PHAEDRUS. H. N. Fowler. (11th Imp.)
PLATO II: THEAETETUS AND SOPHIST. H. N. Fowler. (4th Imp.)
PLATO III: STATESMAN, PHILEBUS. H. N. Fowler; ION. W. R. M. Lamb. (4th Imp.)
PLATO IV: LACHES, PROTAGORAS, MENO, EURiHYDEMUS. W. R. M. Lamb. (3rd Imp. revised.)
PLATO V: LYSIS, SYMPOSIUM, GORGIAS. W. R. M. Lamb. (5th Imp. revised.)
PLATO VI: CRATYLUs, PARMeNIDES, GREATER HIPPIAS. LESSER HIPPIAS. N. H. Fowler. (4th Imp.)
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

PLATO: LAWS. Rev. R. G. Bury. 2 Vols. (3rd Imp.) POLYBIUS. W. R. Paton. 6 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
PTOLEMY: TETRABIBLOS. Cf. Manetho.
THEOPHRASTUS: CHARACTERS. J. M. Edmonds; Herodes, etc. A. D. Knox. (3rd Imp.) THEOPHRASTUS: ENQUIRY INTO PLANTS. Sir Arthur Hort. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
THUCYDIDES. C. F. Smith. 4 Vols. (Vol. I 5th Imp., Vols. II-IV 3rd Imp. revised.) TRYPHIODORUS. Cf. Oppian.
XENOPHON: CYRÓPAEDIA. Walter Miller. 2 Vols. (4th Imp.) XENOPHON: MEMORABILIA AND OECONOMICUS. E. C. Marchant. 3rd Imp.)
XENOPHON: SCRIPTA MINORA. E. C. Marchant. (3rd Imp.)
THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

VOLUMES IN PREPARATION

GREEK AUTHORS

AFLIAN: DE NATURA ANIMALIUM. A. F. Scholfield.
CALLIMACHUS: FRAGMENTS. C. A. Trypanis.
PLOTINUS. A. H. Armstrong.

LATIN AUTHORS

ST. AUGUSTINE: CITY OF GOD.
CICERO: PRO SESTIO, IN VATINUM, PRO CAELIO, DE PRO-VINCIIS CONSULARIBUS, PRO BALBO. J. H. Freese and R.
Gardner.
PHAEDRUS AND OTHER FABULISTS. B. E. Perry.

DESCRIPTIVE PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD
Cloth 15s.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.
HARVARD UNIV. PRESS
Cloth $3.00